Martin Singled Out

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

Boston, Oct. 30.—Concluding an all-day invasion of New England, President Roosevelt tonight told a cheering throng of Bostonians that he had urged "most sympathetic consideration" for a new British request for 12,000 additional fighting planes.

The new order will bring the total of those destined for the British to more than 26,000.

He told the crowd of 25,000 that packed the Boston Garden that "large additional orders are being negotiated for artillery, machine-guns, rifles and tanks with equipment and ammunition."

"The plant capacity necessary to produce all of this military equipment is and will be available to serve the needs of the United States in any emergency," he declared.

In this cosmopolitan city which gave him a better than 2-to-1 majority in 1936, he asserted that "We are following hard-headed self-interest" in accepting armament orders from overseas.

Mr. Roosevelt departed for Washington after his address.

Attacks Martin's Voting Record

The President lashed out at the Republican record on both defense and farm legislation, and reiterated his declaration that American boys "are not going to be sent into any foreign war."

And he chose the home State of Republican National Chairman and House Minority Leader Joseph Martin to deliver a specific attack on Martin's "voting record."

The President reviewed the Administration's farm program, denounced the Republicans for their attitude toward the farmer and facetiously suggested that Martin would be named Secretary of Agriculture by the Republicans because "he voted against every single one of the farm measures recommended by this Administration."

Through the heart of Connecticut and Massachusetts, President Roosevelt proceeded by train and auto on a trip that combined "defense inspection" with a frank search for the 25 electoral votes the two States have to offer.

Office Workers Cheer

The President chose Hartford, insurance capital of the Nation, to denounce in acid words the "many executives of insurance companies who are trying to spread fear among policy holders."

Theirs "is the most dastardly and most unpatriotic action of any Americans I know of," the President declared as a lunch hour crowd

The Gallup Poll

Connecticut Swings Over To Willkie

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 30.—A sharp gain in the popularity of Wendell Willkie in Connecticut, a gain which shifts the State out of the Democratic column and into the Republican column, is revealed in the latest sampling by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

The Willkie trend, while apparently gathering momentum in New England, shows no increase, however, in Willkie's Midwest home State of Indiana, where the Roosevelt forces have held their own since the last Institute poll.

Returns from Indiana and Connecticut, one representative of the East, and the other of the Midwest, are as follows:

Connecticut today, Roosevelt, 49 per cent; Willkie, 51 per cent. October 27 poll, Roosevelt, 54 per cent; Willkie, 46. Indiana today, Roosevelt, 47 per cent; Willkie, 53. October 27 poll, Roosevelt, 47 per cent; Willkie, 53 per cent.

The proportion of voters undecided about their choice is 4 per cent in each State in the poll.

Willkie recently completed a tour of the New England States, but Roosevelt did not enter that area until Wednesday of this week, when he moved up the Connecticut Valley into Massachusetts. Will the President's visit halt and reverse the Willkie trend in Connecticut?

Later poll results to be published this week may provide an answer. Today's results are based on interviewing between October 23 and 28.

Institute polls throughout the Nation in the last two weeks have revealed an accelerating trend toward Willkie—the second of two distinct trends noted in this campaign.

Roosevelt Trend Stopped

The first was a trend in favor of Roosevelt beginning in late August and continuing through September. Then, in October, came a halting and sharp reversal of this trend, and Willkie has been gaining ever since. The latest national survey showed him advancing three points since early October, although Roosevelt is still in the lead with 53 per cent.

Had the election been held a month ago, when Roosevelt was polling 56 per cent (Oct. 6), a Democratic victory would have been assured.

If the Willkie trend continues unhalted, however, so many States may end up near the 50 per cent line that any scientific prediction of the election will become impossible, not only because of the closeness of the race but because of unsurveyable factors, such as turnout of voters on election day, political machine activity, weather and other factors.

It is not unlikely, with a continued Republican trend, that as many as 15 or 20 States including New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and other large States, will be in the category where neither candidate has a majority of more

Republican Nominee Predicts U. S. Will Be in It 'by April,' If Roosevelt Wins

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 3.—Wendell Willkie tonight accused President Roosevelt of "reckless" diplomacy and questioned his pledges of peace.

"On the basis of his past performances with pledges to the people, if you reelect him you may expect war in April, 1931," Willkie said. And he added, "Now, Mr. Third-Term Candidate, has Wendell Willkie falsified the record about that?"

Willkie called on Maryland voters to reject a third-term attempt "to force candidates on you," as it turned back the 1938 "purge" effort.

And he questioned the "good faith" of the President's pledge of peace.

The Republican Presidential nominee added to his prepared text to say that Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, had arisen from his sick bed in 1932 to assure the country that Mr. Roosevelt would maintain sound currency.

"Are You Kidding Kennedy?"

Likening Glass' statement to a speech this week by Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy saying that the President would keep the country out of war, Willkie asked:

"Are you kidding Joe Kennedy the same way you kidded Carter Glass?"

The audience cheered loudly.

All day Willkie had scattered "road to war" charges through West Virginia and Maryland rail and mine centers and tonight he drove them home in this Baltimore bid for Democratic and Republican votes.

Maryland "free State," he said, gave the Nation religious freedom and the right of local self-government. He said Maryland defended its right of free government by rejecting the "purge" of Senator Tydings, Democrat, whom he praised.

Sees Victory in Maryland

Maryland likewise, he predicted, "will repudiate its (the New Deal) attempt to pervert our free institutions and take us down the road of complete state domination."

An estimated 20,000 jammed the Fifth Regiment Armory, while others battled vainly to get in. They set up a deafening shout of "We want Willkie," when he was sighted, then broke into a demonstration that delayed the speech several minutes.

Willkie said it was "a wonderful thing to receive such a welcome from one's prospective neighbors."

It was a friendly, noisy crowd that wildly cheered Willkie's promise to "work for peace," and to aid Britain "to the limits of prudence for our own safety." Just as loudly it booed every reference to "the third-term candidate," his "indispensability"

War Offices Combed for Clew To Fire, Sabotage Scouted

Two official boards searched yesterday among the twisted girders of the third wing of the Munitions Building, seeking a clew to the early morning blaze which swept the structure, threatening Army records.

Damage from fire alone was unofficially estimated at $150,000, and water poured into offices on the first three floors of the wing caused a loss not yet estimated. The top wing, where the fire apparently started, was under construction to care for rapidly expanding defense requirements and would have been occupied within a few days.

All theories of sabotage were scouted by War Department officials, who pointed out that secret documents in the burned wing, even code books in the Signal Corps message center, were part of several copies and their destruction would entail no serious loss. Irreplaceable documents damaged consisted chiefly of correspondence.

Secretary of Navy Knox, at a press conference in his office in the adjoining Navy Building, said Secretary of War Stimson had expressed the opinion the fire "undoubtedly" was caused by a short circuit or a cigarette.

A day of investigation revealed that:

The fire started on the new fourth floor, the east wall in the center being the "hottest spot," indicating it probably was the point of origin.

The floor had been polished Tuesday with an inflammable agent. An electric polisher, temporarily wired, and cloths used in the work were left on the floor.

Local alarms in the building, chiefly from awning fires, aver-

984 Are Summoned From New England; District Selection Awaits Master List

FEDERAL personnel directors study their employment problem in relation to the drawing of selectees from Government departments. Page 7.

First to Serve

The first contingent of men drawn in Tuesday's selective service lottery was called to the colors yesterday to report November 18.

In Boston, Maj. Gen. George A. Woodruff, commanding the First Corps Area, requisitioned 984 men from the Governors of six New England States. First contingents totaling 30,000 men from other States and the District will be called later for the same date, first selected men of the 800,000 who are to be in uniform by June.

In Washington, the next step toward the Nation's greatest peacetime army for 6,000 men this year awaited only the ability of the National Selective Service Board to check and compile its master lists. As soon as these are received, said Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, local selective service executive, questionnaires will be sent to the District's registrants.

1,982 To Be Called

From these questionnaires will be chosen the first contingents of Washington selectees, 1,901 of whom will be called before March 1 and 1,982 by June.

By a freak of chance, some 5,000 Washingtonians who registered in other cities will find themselves well up on the list of those to be called. It happened that many high serial numbers were drawn early in the lottery and numbers above those already assigned in the District will have to be given to late arrivals.

At first it is expected those whose serial numbers were within the first 200 drawn will receive questionnaires for the first contingent to be sent to the Army. It was pointed out that totals to be called here probably will be revised downward as volunteers cut the District's quota.

Suit Threatens Legal Tangle

Fleet Gets Thirty Fast Supply Ships

Acquisition Will Enable Warships To Enlarge Radius Of Operations

Ship Deal

A SECRET British-American deal for mass production of merchant ships here will soon be ready for public announcement.

Steps for Defense

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Naval officials, disclosing the acquisition of some 30 supply ships within the last two weeks, said yesterday that the United States Fleet soon will be able to operate in the Far East or any other part of the world.

Fast commercial tankers, transports and supply ships are being taken over as quickly as possible and adapted to naval use, it was said, so as to free the Navy from dependence on its bases in Hawaii and on the mainland and enable it to move "anywhere it might need to go."

Secretary Knox announced the acquisition of nine high-speed tankers from the Standard Oil Company, bringing to an even dozen the number of such ships taken over, and the purchase of six transports, three store ships and miscellaneous ships for the fleet "train."

To Go to Hawaii

He said the new vessels will be sent to Hawaii to join the fleet and that the Navy, is "very rapidly" getting a supply ship force fast enough and numerous enough to let it move anywhere. Other officials, noting that this acquisition program will be complete within a short time—probably only a few months—agreed that the thus strengthened Fleet "could operate in the Philippines or anywhere in the world."

The lack of any adequate American bases west of Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, has caused many military experts to conclude that the United States Fleet, in its present strength, would be unable to defend the Philippine Islands or carry on wartime operations in Far Eastern waters. The acquisition of a fast, large train of supply ships will GREEK TROOPS, withdrawing slowly before a three-pronged Italian offensive, report a successful counterthrust in the center, but neutral reports indicate Italian advances in heavy fighting on both flanks.

AXIS INTIMATIONS of an imminent "peace offensive" to end the Greco-Italian war are heard in Rome, Berlin and Belgrade.

Surprise Blow

By International News Service

Athens (Thursday), Oct. 31, Greek troops, supported by three light air bombers, were reported early today to have captured several Italian frontier posts inside Albania after hurling Fascist invaders back to their own soil.

This surprise blow was delivered yesterday along the irregular northwestern front between Florina and Ioannina (Janina), according to unofficial reports reaching Athens early this morning.

It appeared to have checked, at least partially, the general advance of the Italian invaders. But, in other sectors, increasing Fascist forces were said to be pushing farther and approaching the main Greek defense lines to which the principal units of 400,000 Greek troops had withdrawn.

[Frontier dispatches reaching Belgrade, the United Press reported, said the Italians had captured the highway town of Bresnica, 30 miles inside Greece, opening up the main route to Salonika through Florina. This dispatch said Italian bombing squadrons followed up a heavy artillery bombardment to pave the way for advancing ground troops, which drove the Greeks from the town in hand-to-hand fighting.

[This reported Italian thrust was near the northeastern end of the curving battle-line around Albania's southern and southeastern frontiers. The other major Italian

Diplomacy Still Not Hopeless, Italians Say; Prince Paul, Under Arrest in Athens, Looked to as Trickery's Spearhead

Rome, Oct. 30.—Italian troops are continuing their advance on Greek territory, repelling the enemy's "rear guard action," the high command announced today, amid indications the Italians still are hopeful of a diplomatic settlement of Europe's latest war.

Italian troops are understood to be advancing simultaneously in the direction of Ioannina, Koritza and Kastoria in the northeast. Ioannina, which is about 30 miles south of the border, bars the way to Preveza, which is about 50 miles southward on the coast. Preveza is a naval base dominating the Gulf of Arta, and therefore it is not doubted that operations are being carried out to attain some very important strategic objectives.

Kastoria, about 15 miles from the east border of Albania, is also believed to be one of the immediate objectives of the high command, since it is on the Vistritza River, which flows into the Gulf of Saloniki at the head of the Aegean.

Signs that the Italian government has not abandoned hopes for a diplomatic settlement with Greece were seen by many in the strong emphasis responsible quarters and the press laid on the contention that the war is not aimed at the Greek people, but rather at Britain.

Gibraltar Attacked With Secret Weapon

Gibraltar, Oct. 30.—The British naval command announced tonight that Italians had made "an abortive attempt" to torpedo ships in Gibraltar Harbor with "a special device," adding that one torpedo exploded harmlessly at the harbor entrance and that another ran ashore on Spanish territory.

The torpedo which ran aground on Spanish territory near La Linea was taken by Spanish officials to Cadiz for examination by experts.

Nazi Sea Raider Sinks 3 'Enemy Merchantmen'

Vessel Reported To Be Sister Ship Of the Graf Spee

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Oct. 30.—A German warship, operating as a raider "in overseas water," has sunk three armed "enemy merchant ships' totalling 18,400 tons to boost her war toll to 45,000 tons, the high command announced today.

It did not identify the raider. All details of the operations were withheld.

(Shipping circles have heard unconfirmed reports that one of the two sister ships of the Admiral Graf Spee—the Luetzow and the Admiral Scheer—has been operating in the South Atlantic.

(When the American Export Line freighter Excellency docked in Boston today from the Far East, passengers said a German raider had sunk six ships in the South Indian Ocean, five British and one Greek.

(The German raider Emden operated in that territory in the World War, sinking 70 British, French, Russian and Japanese ships, before it was sent to the bottom in a running fight with the Australian cruiser Sydney off the Cocos Islands November 9, 1914.)

The high command announced that a submarine had sunk an armed

Petain Bids People to Work With the Axis

Tells Them New Accord May Ease Their Burden

Vichy, France, Oct. 30.—In a broadcast to the French nation this afternoon Marshal Petain took the entire responsibility for the conversations with Chancellor Hitler and implied that he expects France to accept his leadership in this matter as in others.

"This policy is mine. The ministers are responsible to me. History will judge me alone," he added. "Hitherto I have spoken to you as a father. Today I speak to you as the leader."

The nation by now is accustomed to receive trenchant words from the marshal; today listeners were struck by his forcefulness both in substance and delivery.

The address came at an opportune moment. All France has been anxious to learn more of Marshal Petain's meeting with Hitler than has been permitted in the newspapers.

The country learned several things spoken with frankness, after strict censorship had for several days insisted that its duty was simply to wait and see.

First, Petain made it clear that he met Hitler on the latter's invitation and that he was submitted to no pressure. Next he insisted that so far only a "principle" has been accepted. That principle relates to collaboration, "which must be sincere but which must exclude all thought of aggression" (here 20 words were censored).

Confidence a Duty

Other salient passages related to the "hopes as well as anxieties" caused by the meeting with the Fuehrer, and the declaration that to those "whom noble scruples kept distant from my thoughts I must say the first duty of every Frenchman is to have confidence."

Notable also was a passage indicating that collaboration might—use of the conditional mood was duly noted by listeners—lighten France's sufferings, improve the fate of prisoners of war and reduce the costs of the German army of occupation, together with modification of the line of demarcation.

Marshal Petain furthermore indicated that in order to strengthen his hand "at a time when France has many obligations vis-a-vis a victorious Germany," there should be no divergences of opinion and

Greeks Reported Getting Soviet Planes

Copyright by New York Times

Saloniki, Oct. 30.—In the last few days 134 Soviet bombers and fighters are reported to have arrived in Greece in conformity with a recent Soviet-Greek agreement.

It is stated that the warplanes were brought by rail through Thrace in two consignments. About 45 were bombers and the rest fighters.

[The report, if true, would mean Greece's air force of an estimated 125 planes, has been more than doubled.]

Lewis Denies Cabinet Aims

John L. Lewis, the Congress of Industrial Organization leader who last week gave his support to Wendell L. Willkie for President, said yesterday that he would not accept the Secretaryship of Labor. "If, in the future, it should again be tendered to me."

He issued a statement commenting upon a radio speech by Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York, last night, which was announced as a reply to the speech in which Lewis announced for Willkie and gave his views on the Roosevelt Administration.

Lewis described the Wagner speech as a "futile attempt" at answering him.

"Senator Wagner is an honorable man and I esteem him highly," Lewis said in his statement. "It is unfortunate that he stooped to charge by inference and innuendo that an offer of the portfolio of Labor would influence me.

"In the past, I have been offered the portfolio of Labor, and I have

Salonika Confirms Landings Of British Troops in Greece

By J. Wes. Gallagher
Associated Press Staff Writer

Saloniki, Greece (Thursday) Oct. 31.—British troops have landed on Greek islands from troop transports guarded by warships of the British Mediterranean fleet, it was learned authoritatively today.

The number of British troops involved and the amount of equipment they brought could not be stated, nor could the location of the islands where they made their landings.

[The British information office in Ankara, Turkey, said British naval detachments had landed on Crete and the island of Cephalonia, south of Corfu. London sources denied that "troops" had been landed on the Greek islands, and said they had no information about the naval landings.

[A direct United Press dispatch from Corfu indicated British warships had not landed troops on the island and that no fighting had occurred there thus far.

[Only official British information regarding aid to Greece was an admiralty announcement in London that the navy had mined approaches to important ports on both the east and west coasts of Greece. The announcement said portions of the Gulfs of Corinth and Patras had been mined and that a minefield had been sown in waters north of the island of Crete, including the approach to Piraeus, port of Athens.]

Information from usually reliable sources in the Dodecanese Islands said some 500 Italian soldiers had been killed in a "recent" British naval bombardment of the Italian drive appeared developing at the far end of the line, near the Adriatic coast, while the reported Greek counterpush was about midway between the two Italian thrusts.]

The first large-scale battles of Europe's newest war were expected to develop shortly on three fronts—the Konispolis-Ioannina District in the West, the valley between Koritza and Krevena in the center, and the highway stretch between Florina and Kastoria, in the northeast.

Despite the tenacity of Greek resistance, it was admitted in Athens that the full force of Italy's attack had as yet by no means been felt. But Mussolini evidently was being compelled to pour fresh forces into the fray. Seven transport ships, laden with troops, were reported to have crossed the Adriatic to the southern Albanian port of Santa Quaranti (Porto Edda) and an eighth transport was believed en route.

Patras Bombed Five Times

Athens, age-old shrine of western culture, experienced a 20-minute air raid alarm last night, but Italian planes did not fly over the ancient capital. They bombed the Port of Patras, on the gulf of Corinth, five times Wednesday.

[The Athens News Agency, the Associated Press reported, charged that Italian bombers flying Greek colors dumped 200 bombs upon crowds in the streets of Patras Monday before that city even knew Greece was at war. The agency said the people had gathered to watch what they thought were their own planes at the moment the bombs began falling.

[The casualties were reported at 110 dead and more than 300 wounded, with rescuers still digging in the debris.]

The Greek counterdrive into Albania was said to have opened with a dive-bombing and machine gunning attack by the three light Greek bombers on a marching column of Italians and Italian reserve concentrations between Florina and Ioannina.

Simultaneously, hardy Greek mountain troops savagely attacked the Italian flanks along ravines through which the Fascists were moving south and east.

The Italians were said to have been flung into retreat, with the Greeks in hot pursuit and the latter were reported to have occupied several border posts inside Albania. These positions, it was admitted, may prove untenable in the face of the expected Italian counterattack.

Nearly 500 Italian prisoners were reported to have been transported to Salonika where wounded Greeks and Italians were placed in hospitals.

Impeded by rainy weather as well as Greek resistance, the Italians apparently managed to score gains in some sectors and losses in others.

The heaviest Italian attack thus far launched appeared to be proceeding down the west coast from the vicinity of Konispolis, some 30 miles west of the road junction town of Ioannina. It was here that the first withdrawal of Greek outpost troops to prepared positions occurred.

North and west of Ioannina, Italian troops moved behind heavy artillery and air barrages in a double-columned pincer drive to capture that industrial town, 30 miles below the Albanian border. Neutral military advices said the Greeks were stubbornly blocking this first major push of the 3-day-old conflict.

The Italians also were reported to have greatly increased the force of their push against Florina, en route east to Saloniki.

In this sector the Fascists, still prevented by heavy rains and mountain terrain from employing their tanks and armored cars, opened up a violent artillery bombardment that flung shells across Lake Prespa, where Greece and Albania meet Yugoslavia.

In this western Macedonian region, where King Philip and his son Alexandria the Great once organized armies that conquered most of the ancient world, the Greek high command admitted certain withdrawals had been made to previously prepared defense positions known as the Metaxas Line.

As the kilted Greek border troops gradually fell back, however, they made the invaders pay dearly for their gains.

Italians Rush Reinforcements

Belgrade, Oct. 30 (U.P.).—Indicating that the Italian high command is ready to launch a grand-scale offensive and is testing the Greek lines for weak spots, Fascist reinforcements were said to be pushing into the advance lines, particularly in the Ciamuria region near the Adriatic coastline.

Italian forces operating from the southwestern tip of Albania against Ciamuria were reported to have opened a strong mountain artillery bombardment, from the town of Konispolis, against the small Greek port of Saiada.

The Greeks replied with artillery fire, starting a four-hour duel and a Greek gunboat stationed at Saiada was said to have participated in the shelling.

Italian Losses Heavier

The reported Italian capture of Janari was said to have followed a two-hour battle late Tuesday in which seven Greeks were killed and 20 wounded. The Italian losses were said to have been far heavier than those of the Greeks, however.

dissidence in the colonies should end. "To those who doubt as well as to those who remain obstinate, I would recall that excessive stiffening and the finest attitudes of reserve and pride risk losing their force."

And the marshal ended with: "Follow me, preserve your confidence in France eternal."

It is pointed out in more than one quarter tonight that Petain once more tells France plainly that he alone is responsible at present for the direction of her destinies and that, as customary in his addresses and messages, he disregards all prohibitions and restrictions regarding the [illegible] of this or that word or reference [illegible] this or that topic which has forced French reporters and foreign correspondents.

His address seems to answer an article in the German newspaper, the Boerzen Zeitung, which states, "much will depend on the fundamental attitude France will adopt in the final phase of the struggle which will lead to the overthrow of Britain."

Stresses Leader Principle

It also seems to meet the comment in Le Temps last night that "naturally it would be an insult to the French nation to throw into the scale certain material benefits destined to render more palatable certain concessions of quite another kind."

It is noted also that the address throughout stresses that the marshal is "the chief" and indicates squarely the ministers must follow the chief's policy.

Vice Premier Pierre Laval is reported to be still in Paris but there is no indication what progress is being made with negotiations. His paper, the Clermont-Ferrand Moniteur, this morning expatiated on the prospect that many French families are beginning to hope to see their dear ones (prisoners) again soon and on the beneficient effects collaboration may have on the country's economic life.

See Stiffening Attitude

Copyright by New York Times

Berne, Oct. 30.—French quarters here tonight professed to see a stiffening of the French attitude in resisting German peace terms. Marshal Petain's message was taken as proof he is beginning to lose confidence in Vice Premier Pierre Laval and will increasingly take negotiations into his own hands.

They say he has so far been successful in resisting German demands for naval and aerial bases in North Africa and Syria, but doubt he will be able to hold out indefinitely.

Some circles, aware of the Fuehrer's love for the dramatic point to November 11 as a likely date for a ceremonious signing away of France's birthright for the "pottage" promises of "no further territorial claims" by Hitler.

Boston, Oct. 30 (AP).—Sinking of six ships by a German raider operating in the south Indian Ocean was reported today by five passengers arriving on the American Export Line freighter Excellency from the Far East.

Victims of the raider, the passengers said, were five British ships and a Greek freighter.

They said the Excellency was stopped for identification off Madagascar by a heavily armed Dutch cruiser, which, with British warships, was seeking the raider. Reminiscent of "Q" boats of the last World War, the cruiser was accompanied by a "decoy" merchantman, intended to lure the raider, they recounted. They said the crews of the five British ships sunk were believed to be aboard the raider.

Times Belgrade correspondent, Greece will sue for an armistice and hostilities will end by Friday midnight.

[Neutrals indentified the time limit particularly as part of the Berlin peace offensive, but there was a growing conviction among anti-Axis circles in Belgrade that the Greeks will capitulate within a matter of days unless Britain and Turkey do something substantial quickly, this correspondent said.

[Moreover, he added, there appears to be no chance in Greco-German relations, despite Berlin's statements that Germany supports her Axis partner in the Greek adventure.

[Germany was reported in Sofia to be demanding that Greece, under threat of thousands of Nazi troops moving deeper into the Balkans, reach an immediate armistice, the United Press said.

[Persistent but unconfirmed reports circulated in Sofia that an armistice might be imminent, as result of Hitler's pressure. Heavy fighting in Greece at this time does not fit into the Fuehrer's broader plans for Axis conquest, it was said.]

It is stressed everywhere in Rome that Italy wants to occupy only certain unspecified points "for the duration of the war," and appeals are being made to Greece's common sense not to let herself be influenced by Britain into fighting a war which she has no chance of winning.

Point to Mild Policy

Those supporting this viewpoint to the fact that the press campaign which accompanied the commencement of operations virtually ignored the so-called "provocations and terrorist policy" of Greece. True, they were mentioned in the ultimatum, but it is pointed out that they were given at what may be regarded as incidental mention only, the main stress having been on the "connivance" of the Greek government with London against Italy.

This, it is added, is not mere coincidence, because it is an open secret that the press is controlled directly by Premier Mussolini himself. Another indication of Italian intention to leave an open door for diplomatic negotiations lies in the very fact that the ultimatum did not mention the specific Greek possessions Italy wants to occupy.

Still another sign is seen in the failure of today's communique to report Italian aerial activity over Greece. This restraint suggests a lull in air operations, since it is not believed that Greece's 100-odd planes are a match for Italy's bombers.

It is recalled that when Germany attacked Holland and Belgium the Nazi air force unleashed the most devastating raids against the military objectives of those countries. Italy, like Germany in the case of the Lowlands, has overwhelming aerial superiority over Greece and the fact she is not taking full advantage of it to smash the enemy is considered highly significant.

The Greek minister was still in Rome late tonight. Informed circles said he had asked for his passport, but there was no definite indication concerning his departure.

Hint at Negotiations

Rome, Oct. 30 (U.P.).—Fascist quarters hinted tonight that under-cover negotiations are underway to end the 3-day-old war with Greece and that Crown Prince Paul, 31-year-old brother of King George II, may be placed on the Greek throne because of his strong Italian sympathy.

Italian press dispatches claimed that Prince Paul and his German-born princess were under arrest orders of Premier John Metaxas.

[There were reports in Sofia that Adolf Hitler, working through Turkey and other neighbors and using heavy concentrations of Nazi troops as a threat, was urging Greece to end hostilities with Italy.]

High Fascist quarters claimed there is a definite bloc of influential Greeks who are anxious to make a deal with Italy along the lines of Mussolini's ultimatum to the Metaxas government early Monday.

Prince Paul, it was said, really is a secret leader of this bloc and if the Greek government is reshuffled along the lines of the recent pro-Nazi shakeup in the Rumanian government, he may be placed on the throne to bring about an understanding between Rome and Athens.

Fascist quarters seemed confident that Prince Paul, once on the throne, would be willing to agree to Italian occupation of Saloniki, Crete and other vital Greek bases for the duration of the war with Britain.

Might Lose Some Ports

If Greece can be persuaded by the Axis to come to terms, it was understood Mussolini would be willing to promise restoration of all Greek territorial sovereignty immediately after the end of the war except perhaps the Ciamuria region which Albanian revisionists are demanding and possibly Aegean ports sought by Yugoslavia and Bulgaria.

American Flying With Britain Tells of Downing Big Dornier

English Carry Bricks to Berlin With Love Notes for Goering; Italians War on Bikes Built for 2

Copyright by New York Tribune Inc.

London, Oct. 30.—Gene Tobin, an American pilot officer of the Eagle Squadron of the Royal Air Force, described in a broadcast tonight how he had shot down his first German plane.

It was before the formation of the Eagle Squadron, composed solely of Americans, and Tobin was still flying with a British fighter squadron on September 15, the day the Germans lost 185 planes.

"It was only my second air fight. . . . At 20,000 feet I met a formation of Messerschmitt 110's. I gave one a burst and saw him giving out smoke. But I lost him in the clouds before I could press home my attack.

"Then below me I saw a big Dornier 215 bomber try to seek the safety of some clouds. I followed it down and gave it a long 'squirt.' Its left motor stopped and its right aileron came to bits, smoke was pouring from it as the bomber disappeared in a cloud. I followed. Suddenly the clouds broke and on the ground I saw a number of crashed aircraft. It was an amazing sight. They had all crashed within the radius of about 20 miles from our fighter station. My Dornier was there, too. I was quite sure I could see it. A little later I learned that the intelligence officers' report on the damage to the crashed Dornier agreed with my own, so I knew I had claimed my first definite German victim."

British Toss Bricks for Goering

London, Oct. 30.—British airmen who bomb Berlin take with them a brick or a small incendiary bomb in addition to their regulation load of high explosives, according to Squadron Leader R. Collard, 29-year-old veteran of night bombing, when interviewed today.

These private missiles are marked with a personal message—as are most torpedoes and big shells—such as "With Love from Harry," or "To Goering—Please Forward."

Ottawa, Ont., Oct. 30 (AP).—The 5,779-ton former French freighter St. Malo has been sunk by "enemy action" while flying the Canadian flag, and 28 of her crew, most of whom were Canadians, are missing, the Transport Department announced today.

The vessel was taken over by Canada last August, having been in a Canadian port when France capitulated to Germany.

The navy announced earlier the auxiliary minesweeper Bras d'Or, on patrol duty in the lower St. Lawrence River, is overdue with 39 officers and men aboard.

Italians Invade Greece On Bikes Built for 2

Rome, Oct. 30 (U.P.).—Italian infantrymen were reported today to be pedaling along Greek roads on bicycles built for two.

Military experiments were said to have perfected the folding bicycles which can be slung across the back where the terrain is bad.

They have solid rubber tires, are painted light green for camouflage purposes, and have two-wheel brakes. The driver in the front saddle can sling his rifle across the handlebars, while his colleague has a small stand in front of him on which to mount a light machine gun.

To facilitate travel over rough country, the bikes are equipped with three-speed gears.

Argentina Offers Free Beef to British Warships

Buenos Aires, Oct. 30.—All British warships visiting Argentine ports in the future will be restocked with fresh meats free of charge as the result of an offer made to the British Embassy here by a committee of Argentine cattle growers. This committee has sent several shipments of free beef to England for the use of British troops. The British Ambassador, accepting the offer, expressed the deep gratitude of his government.

Pan American Seeks Rerouting of Clippers

New York, Oct. 30 (AP).—Pan American Airways said yesterday it had applied to the Civil Aeronautics Authority for permission to reroute west-bound transatlantic clippers this winter via West Africa, Trinidad and Puerto Rico.

More favorable winds and weather conditions on the proposed route would enable the flying boats to double their passengers from Lisbon, Portugal, officials said.

Imbecilic Diplomacy Laid to Democracies

Former U. S. Aide Asserts Germany's Supplies Increase

Copyright by New York Times

New York, Oct. 30.—Spencer Williams, who was Moscow representative of the American-Russian Chamber of Commerce for ten years, and Herman Merten, who said he had been employed in the American Embassy at Berlin, were among the passengers who arrived at Jersey City today from Lisbon on the American Export liner Excalibur.

Merten, a German-born naturalized citizen of the United States, directed an assistant purser on the ship to inform reporters that he was anxious to be interviewed.

He submitted copies of two statements which he had written. One, in editorial style, referred to the "imbecilic diplomacy" of the democracies. The other was a news release telling of his arrival with Mrs. Merten.

He said he had resigned from the staff of the agricultural relations staff of the Embassy in Berlin after serving three years. When interviewed he spoke of the "faith in Hitler's foresight and manipulation of warfare" demonstrated by the German people.

He described the stores of food and supplies in Germany as greater than at the beginning of the war. When reminded that much of what he said did not conform with versions given by other persons who have arrived here from Germany, he commented: "That's the trouble."

"Spirit of Fearlessness"

He spoke of a "spirit of fearlessness" among the younger people of Germany and then said: "Nevertheless, they are desirous of pleasant relations with the United States."

He related that the "real German people of the older school" were anxious for the people of the United States to know of "their heartfelt desire to have pleasant relations developed economically and spiritually."

"The consensus of opinion among Germans is that America need not fear aggression from Germany. The younger people of Germany desire and still have great hope that America will not interfere with development of a new German social order in Europe and that after the war the greatest benefits could be derived by the United States through mutually beneficial trade relations with Germany."

He said this trade would have to be on a barter basis, adding "the barter basis was forced on Germany and it is the only method they know now."

The morale of the German people has not suffered by reason of failure of their army to invade England, said Merten, adding that "their faith in Hitler's foresight has convinced them there is good reason for the delay."

German opinion, he continued, was that the United States would not enter the war "until spring." "But Germany," he added "believes something will happen to make the United States' entry too late."

Resigned as Translator

Merten said he would report to the State Department in Washington.

[Merten was said by the State Department to have resigned voluntarily as a translator in the embassy.]

He was said to have been employed originally by the office of the American agricultural attache in 1937. When that office was amalgamated with the Foreign Service on July 1, 1939, he was taken over by the embassy, having been recommended by the office of the agricultural attache as a faithful and orderly employe.

[The State Department made no comment on his interview.]

Williams, who was also a newspaper correspondent and radio broadcaster while in Europe, left Moscow in February because of censorship of his dispatches, and has since traveled in the Balkans, Greece and Turkey.

He said that he had been in Greece at the end of August and that the "utter solidarity" of the Greek people in the face of the crisis which was threatening even at that time was clearly evident. He added, however, that he had "very little confidence in the ability of the Greeks to hold out" because of the superiority of Italian numbers and equipment.

Williams said the determination of Premier Metaxas to fight had made him popular for the first time with the Greek people.

Nazis Back Italians 100%, Berlin Asserts

'No One Shall Snatch Victory From Us,' Hitler Wires Duce

By Louis P. Lochner

Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Oct. 30.—Germany is 100 per cent on the side of Italy in the conflict with Greece, a foreign office spokesman said today, and Adolf Hitler, returning to Germany from Florence, Italy, telegraphed Benito Mussolini that "with the might of our armies and the faith of our people, no one now will snatch victory from us."

Italy's action, it was stated, is a manifestation of the Axis policy against England, and Italy and Germany are inseparable in their aims.

The German press echoed these views, chorusing "The Greek Delusion." The newspapers said Greece tried to play a double game of conniving with England while pretending to be a friend of Germany.

They also recorded with interest that the United States Under-secretary of State, Summer Welles, had received the Greek minister in Washington, and that Britain's first Lord of the Admiralty, A. V. Alexander, had assured "our friends in in Greece and America" that the British fleet will give Greece the greatest help possible.

Authorized sources spoke contemptuously of such British assurances, however, saying: "The few sentences spoken by the Fuehrer during his 4,000-mile trip (through France to Spain and Italy) mean more than all this English twaddle; a few sentences by him have greater historical significance than six months of British diplomacy."

These same persons reiterated that "big events" are in the immediate offing, but they added that they could observe no indication that the Greek conflict would involve any other Balkan state. However, informed sources had hinted earlier that the Axis, in an endeavor to break Britain in the Eastern Mediterranean, might hand Turkey an ultimatum such as the one which Greece rejected.

In any event, spokesmen insisted, the outcome of the present conflict will show that "any conception of England as a Mediterranean power is fiction."

Londoners Want to Hear What's Going On

London, Oct. 30 (AP).—A government issue of some 4,000,000 earplugs is going begging, according to an Air Raid Warden of the London area.

The people apparently want to hear what's going on. How can one tell his neighbor about "my bomb" if he didn't even hear it?

British Fleet Slows Italians, Soviet Thinks

Red Army Paper Sees No Signs of Early Victory in Greece

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Oct. 30.—The Soviet Army organ, Red Star declared today the British fleet's mastery of the Eastern Mediterranean was such that Italy could hope for no "quick decisive development" in its campaign to subdue Greece.

The article, which followed other remarks by the newspaper to the effect that Germany's unending air attacks upon Britain still had not given the Nazis air supremacy, observed:

"The location of Greece in the eastern part of the Mediterranean, where the British fleet is master, insures aid from her British allies who are interested in keeping so advantageous a battlefield as Greece.

"The limited possibilities of Albania as the base for the Italian front—having only three or four highways—make it difficult for Italy to concentrate overwhelming forces.

"With the appearance of British aviation in Greece, the Italian bases in the southeastern part of Italy itself will be subjected to the blows of bombers.

"Under such conditions, operations in the Albanian-Greek theater of war do not promise a quick, decisive development."

The Soviet government, it was disclosed, has been informed by the Greek minister of the war's progress.

A German economic mission headed by Karl Schnurre, Nazi Foreign Office economic expert, arrived today.

(On their departure from Berlin, members of the delegation were said to be planning to discuss Soviet needs for mining, electrical, oil refining and industrial machinery. Also scheduled were discussions on continuation of trade agreements concluded with Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, recently absorbed by the Soviet Union.)

Turko-Soviet Accord Reported

Copyright by New York Times

Stockholm, Oct. 30.—Concerning Turkish-Soviet relations, a news agency reports from Moscow today that competent sources declare the Soviet and Turkey have agreed on a common line of conduct. The same agency's correspondent wires from Istanbul that "the Soviet has offered Turkey its friendship without asking any compensations."

Ciano to Albania

Berne, Oct. 30.—A heavily censored telephone call from Rome tonight said Italian Foreign Minister Ciano intends to leave by plane for Tirana, Albania, tomorrow. His visit is believed to be connected with Italian rumors of forthcoming Greek armistice demands.

Von Papen Leaves Turkey Unexpectedly

Envoy's Recall Follows Press Suggestions For Help to Greece

By the Associated Press

Istanbul, Oct. 30.—Franz von Papen, crafty German diplomat of two great wars, left Turkey unexpectedly today for Germany.

Presumably Von Papen will report to Adolf Hitler on Turkey's position and her intentions in the war which has entered southeastern Europe.

(It was 25 years ago this December that Von Papen was sent back to Germany from the United States on the State Department's representation that he had indulged in "improper activities in military and naval matters." Hitler named him Ambassador to Turkey in April, 1939, but he failed to prevent Turkey from entering into a mutual assistance pact with Britain.)

Von Papen's family is remaining in Turkey, indicating he would return shortly. Reports from Ankara said he saw President Ismet Inonu last night.

Von Papen's recall to Berlin comes at a time when the Turkish press is declaring that "we are wholeheartedly with the Greek nation," and suggesting that this country tender all possible aid to Greece. (This information is contained in Ankara dispatches delayed an entire day in transmission).

The official Turkish radio said tonight that Italy apparently had attacked Greece independent of Germany as a matter of prestige.

The announcer perdicted that the Italians would retain Salonika if they captured it, but would turn over eastern Thrace to Bulgaria. This, he added, "would protect Italy's northern flank for a new advance southward."

Turkish newspapers have warned Bulgaria not to intervene in the Italo-Greek war.

Yesterday Turkey celebrated the seventeenth anniversary of the republic in a martial manner, and an official of the ministry of defense said: "Turkey's army is in excellent condition if it is called upon to defend the nation's frontiers."

One newspaper, Yeni Sabah, went so far as flatly to warn Bulgaria that if she enters the war and "tries an adventure toward the Aegean, she will be faced by the Turkish army."

Both Yeni Sabah and Ulus, the official Ankara newspaper, denounced the Italian attack and urged heroic Greek resistance.

Rail communications were interrupted throughout Turkey (possibly by measures of military preparation.)

Bulgaria's Aid Reported Unwanted

Copyright by New York Times

Stockholm, Oct. 30.—Berlin and Rome do not want Bulgaria to help Italy in her attack on Greece—reports the Berlin correspondent of the conservative Svenska Dagbladet—because it would immediately bring Turkey in on the Greek side.

However, the correspondent infers that the Nazis who interpreted King Boris' Monday speech as an "acknowledgement of Axis policy" are absolutely certain that Bulgaria will intervene in case of a Turkish war declaration against Italy and apparently are confident that Bulgaria would be available even without it should Italy get into trouble.

A great incentive which Berlin believes might send Bulgaria against Greece would be the promise of a Bulgarian port on the Aegean sea.

Relations Reported Good

Copyright by New York Times

Sofia, Bulgaria, Oct. 30.—War Minister Teodosi Daskaloff last night told the press that relations between Bulgaria and Turkey are at present cordial.

An article in the newspaper Mir today is taken here to indicate that Bulgaria is not thinking of taking advantage of Greece's difficulty position.

France Must Foot Bill

Berlin, Oct. 30.—Chancellor Hitler's talks with French statesmen, it is pointed out authoritatively tonight, produced "no formal contracts," but it is taken for granted that the consulations covered "fundamental questions regarding France's future position in Europe."

It is significant that these authoritative statements point out that "the Franco-German conferences were conducted on the basis of France's share in the war guilt, of France's defeat and her obligation to carry her share of the costs."

French statesmen, it is observed here, now realize that the approach to peace with Germany implies recognition by France's new leaders of three facts:

France declared war on Germany, France lost the war. She must now foot the bill.

R. A. F. Reports Hits on Berlin Power Plant

Fliers Brave Snow In Europe, Sandstorm In African Raid

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 30.—Planes of the Royal Air Force roared over Berlin in a blinding snowstorm last night and sent high explosives and incendiaries crashing earthward in the pale light of parachute flares, the air ministry said today.

A large electrical works was hit, the British pilots reported.

They also started fires at oil plants at Magdeburg, Homburg and Sterkrade, the ministry said.

A thick mist froze on the planes over the North Sea and western Germany on the long flight to the German capital and other industrial centers. The weather thickened as they moved eastward and snow began falling, sticking to windshields and sifting into the cockpits.

The men were reduced to blind flying, hopeful that the weather would break before they reached Berlin. Instead it got worse, so that they were barely able to pick out their objectives.

"Still we managed to find our target," one pilot said

Other raiders swooped down on Bremen and Wilhelmshaven, Germany, and on Der Helder, Ymuiden and Flushing, Holland, and Ostend, Belgium, attacking shipyards and docks.

(In Berlin, informed sources said 15 persons were killed by R. A. F. bombs in various Dutch localities.)

Other planes attacked railway communications, searchlight batteries, airdromes and anti-aircraft gun positions. The ministry said two British planes were lost in the operations.

The Air Ministry's news service said the British attacked 29 enemy airdromes in Germany, Holland, Belgium, and France, and started fires at 14 of them.

Some of the planes, the news service said, unable to find their primary targets in the dirty weather, turned to industrial plants at Leipzig and Gelsenkirchen, and the Krupp munition works at Essen.

The explosion of bombs at Magdeburg was so violent, the news service reported, that an attacking plane was badly shaken.

At an airdrome at Rheine a salvo of bombs threw debris high in the air.

Raid Through Sandstorm

Cairo, Egypt, Oct. 30 (AP).—Flying high above a sandstorm over the western desert, British planes yesterday bombed numerous Italian Libyan bases, demolishing buildings at El Gubba, starting two large fires at Gazala and damaging the barracks at the Tobruk naval base, a R. A. F. communique announced today.

Not all the damage apparently inflicted could be seen, the R. A. F. noted, because of the blowing sand and a heavy ground haze.

Numerous raids and reconnaissance flights were made, the R. A. F. said. It listed as objectives Italian-held posts at Derna, Bomba, Tmimi, Gazala, El Gubba, Tobruk, El Adem, Menastir and Salum. The last-named town is in Egypt.

At Derna, the communique said, high explosives fell very close to a number of ships in the harbor "causing in all probability considerable damage."

A large fire was started at the landing field at Salum, and bombs fell among Italian planes at Menastir, the communique said.

Berlin Denies Raid, Snowstorm

New York, Oct. 30 (AP).—The German wireless, in a broadcast heard here by C. B. S., denied that British planes passed over any part of Berlin last night.

"There was no air alarm in greater Berlin last night," the German announcer said. "And, by the way, there was no snowstorm either."

Hitler's Mustache A Plagarism, Says Chaplin

Chicago, Oct. 30 (INS).—Hitler's mustache is what one might term a tonsorial plagarism, Charlie Chaplin said on a visit to Chicago today.

"After all," he said, "I'm the one that made that mustache famous. When I was in Germany the last time, the nation was still half free. The Nazi press wasn't nice to me. They wanted to run me out as an undesirable alien.

"The rest of Germany was laughing at the man called Hitler 'with the Charlie Chaplin mustache.'".

Breaking the Siege of London

Heaviest British Antiaircraft Fire Yet Sends German Air Raiders Streaking for Home

By the Associated Press

London (Thursday), Oct. 31.—The "raiders past" signal shrilled in London before 4 a. m. today, denoting the technical end of a German raid which actually had subsided into all-pervading silence about midnight.

Early Wednesday evening some bombs were dropped in the London area and elsewhere, while British guns roared all the way from the coast to the capital.

Villagers along the Germans' night bombing routes reported that plane after plane had jettisoned explosives in the open fields and fled for home.

It was the first time in all the weeks of the aerial siege that intensive antiaircraft fire had been maintained over such a long defensive front. The dark little towns between here and the cliffs of Kent vibrated to the great roar of the counterattack.

Nevertheless, some raiders broke through these outer defenses and big bombs were dropped on London—40 in one district loosed by planes coming in very low. The action was heavy in other parts of Britain—the port of Liverpool, the Merseyside shipping area in general, the industrial northwest, East Anglia and the southeast coast.

Just after dusk a small group of Messerschmitt fighter-bombers divebombed a group of workers' houses in a southeast town and at least one was reported hit repeatedly by machine-gun ground defenses.

Twice during the day London had raid alarms—the first one unusually brief—but the government announced that in these daylight assaults only "small enemy formations" were able to cross the coast and that there was little damage and few casualties. Specifically mentioned was a town in northwest England, where "a small number of persons" were killed.

Seven German planes were declared shot down during the day, against four British craft lost.

Intermittently, from shortly before noon until the approach of darkness, British fighter planes fought spectacular battles with invaders over the Channel coast areas, plunging down from the cloud banks in which they lay waiting.

In the afternoon, the Dover area was shelled for a time by the big Nazi guns mounted on the French coast, but no casualties or damage of consequence were reported.

Lord Cranborne, the Dominions Secretary, gave the county good news of the state of Britain's aerial defense, announcing that an empire training program now in full progress was designed to produce 20,000 pilots and 30,000 air crews a year.

"And," he said, "the program is now months ahead of schedule."

Aviation Aids U. S., Lindbergh Avers

Growth Strengthens Rather Than Weaken Defense, He Holds

By the Associated Press

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 30.—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh said tonight that an air attack on the United States could be accomplished only with almost insurmountable difficulty and that aviation has strengthened the Nation's position, rather than weakened it.

The noted flier, in a speech prepared for delivery before a public meeting sponsored by the Yale undergraduate chapter of the America First Committee, said that "we are in a better position for defense than any other nation in the world."

"This talk of invasion over Arctic air routes and South American jungles has arisen from a combination of propaganda, hysteria and party politics."

Hemisphere Bases Needed

Listing the "four natural air routes between this hemisphere and Europe"—the northern route, over Greenland and Iceland; the great circle route, over Newfoundland and Ireland; the southern route, over Bermuda and the Azores, and the South Atlantic route, between Africa and Brazil—Col. Lindbergh said:

"A careful study of the various transatlantic air routes shows that the effective bombing of American cities by European aircraft would necessitate the establishment of enemy air bases in our hemisphere by means of sea power.

"Now if the bombing of America cannot be carried on effectively without landing an army first by sea, in order to establish air bases in our hemisphere, why all these claims that aviation has removed the security of our geographical position?" he asked.

"As a matter of fact, the advantage lies with us, for while an enemy would have to approach our shore in ships, we would be able to bomb those ships by air. Aviation has strengthened our position, not weakened it; and no amount of propaganda or party politics can change that fact."

"Disaster for America"

In the longest public address he has ever made, Lindbergh said that the United States' involvement in war "would be a disaster for our own country and for Europe."

This Nation's participation "would be a great disaster for America," he asserted, "because it would confuse and aggravate our internal problems."

"I say that it would be a disaster for Europe," Col. Lindbergh continued, "because I am convinced that the relationships of European countries cannot be solved through American interference in their affairs. I say that it would be a disaster for all of us because from a purely material standpoint we are not in a position to enter this war successfully."

"Our Danger of War"

Lindbergh said he believed the Nation's "wisest policy would be for us to build our security upon the bedrock of our own continent and its adjacent islands, and to proceed toward the independent American destiny that Washington outlined in his Farewell Address a century and a half ago."

"Our danger of war," he declared, "is not because any European nation has attempted to interfere with us, but because we have been interfering with the relationships of Europe."

"The only reason that we need even discuss an invasion of our country is because, while other nations have rearmed, we have allowed our own military forces to become incredibly weak, at the same time that our Government has gone out of its way to antagonize foreign powers."

Shahn Murals to Decorate Security Board Building

THEY WON'T BE WARLIKE—Although the new Social Security Board Building is going to be occupied by the National Defense Advisory Commission for an indefnite period, its mural decorations won't depict soldiers on the march, airplanes in the making, or the like. The Section of Fine Arts, Federal Works Agency, yesterday announced that Ben Shahn, a Hightstown, N. J., artist, has been selected to paint a group of murals in the building's main corridor whose theme will be "the meaning of social security." The mural shown will decorate a wall in the building's main corridor

Contract Bridge

Typical expert play is preparing against unfavorable eventualities. Today's hand, played by Frank K. Perkins, of Boston, might easily have been fumbled. Championship technique insured the three no-trump contract easily.

The bidding:

Opening lead: 3 ♣.

The important play of the hand came on the very first trick, Perkins winning the ace of spades in dummy. His finesse of the jack of diamonds lost to West's king, and West then led another spade to East's king. Declarer's queen captured the third spade lead and he now had but to cash four diamonds, three high clubs and the ace of hearts to make three no trump with an overtrick.

If declarer had failed to win the opening lead, East, after winning with the king of spades, would have shifted to the ten of hearts and nothing could have prevented him from taking three heart tricks. These three tricks, plus the king of spades and the losing diamond finesse would have put declarer down one.

U. S., Britain Plan Huge Shipyard

this country a chief source of replacements for the British mercantile fleet, severely decimated by one year of war.

Estimated to cost $10,000,000, the yard may be located in Baltimore, New Orleans or Portland, Oreg. Final choice of a site has not yet been made.

Informants emphasize that the United States will take no part in paying for the shipyard, but could use it in event of grave national emergency.

J. P. Morgan & Co., fiscal agents for the British government during the World War, and the Dawes' brothers' Chicago banking firm were understood to be ready to finance construction. Failing that, it was reported that the British government would stand the expense.

The mammoth yard would be able to furnish the British with 50 ships the first year and 100 ships a year thereafter, experts estimated.

Functioning more like an assembly plant than an orthodox shipyard, it would assemble prefabricated parts from all over the country and fit them together.

Conflict With Defense Feared

One consideration holding up announcement of the plan, it was learned, is anxiety of United States officials to make sure that the yard would not interfere with American defense supplies of skilled labor, machine tools and raw materials.

The White House, State Department and Maritime Commission were understood to approve the ship-assembly yard plan.

When in operation, the assembly plant could conceivably supply a "bridge of ships" across the Atlantic, carrying war implements, food and raw materials to Great Britain, officials explained.

The 28-ship capacity would be a welcome reinforcement, it was said, for British shipyards that have either already been bombed or are threatened with air raid damage.

Last Rites Today For H. F. Woodard, Retired Lawyer

Fleet Gets 30 Fast Supply Ships

alter this situation materially, in the opinion of many naval officers.

All of the 12 Standard Oil tankers being procured are new ships, and were especially designed for naval use in an emergency. Constructed under an arrangement with the Maritime Commissio, they contain gun emplacements, strengthened decks and tanks for special aviation gasoline, etc., provisions that were paid for by the Government.

Secretary Knox said the tankers and other ships had been purchased by negotiation and not by requisition, as reported, but added that the Government had to "put the pressure on" to get them. He said the Navy was trying to be "as considerate as we can of the necessities of domestic and economic use" but that the deands of the fleet for fast tankers must come first.

At the same time, Knox disclosed these other steps to strengthen the fleet for any eventuality:

Twelve divisions of Naval Reservists from Indianapolis, Detroit, Duluth, Portland, Oreg.; Peoria, Chicago, Kansas City and Boston, totaling about 1,250 officers and men, will be called to active duty in the near future to man the new transports and other ships.

A $1,324,000 order has been placed with the Goodyear Aircraft Corporation, of Akron, for the construction of six blimps for coastal patrol and training work. Four will be 246 feet long and have a volume of 400,000 cubic feet, while the two training ships will be about one-third that size. They are the first of a program of 48 such nonrigid airships to be built under the expansion program.

Knox Urges Men to Enlist

Knox said that a start had been made toward the establishment of bases on three of the islands leased from Great Britain—Placentia Bay in Newfoundland, Bermuda and Trindad. They can be ready for operations in about three months, he said, but will take a long time to complete.

Disclosing that the "two-ocean fleet" now building will require by 1946 more than 500,000 men in both the Navy and Marine Corps, compared to the present 207,000, the Secretary urged men to volunteer now. Men enlisting now "will become the chief petty officers of tomorrow," he declared.

N. Y. Car Riders Use Vote Buttons In Turnstiles

New York, Oct. 30 (AP).—If you think election campaign buttons are good only to indicate party loyalty, listen to William Jerome Daly, secretary of the board of transportation:

"Records of the revenue division of the independent lines of New York City Transit System of October 29 revealed that among slugs and counterfeit coins recovered from turnstiles there were 174 Willkie buttons and 48 Roosevelt buttons."

Daly was prompted to issue his statement after Raymond Poliakoff, 21, was arrested for trying to get by with a Roosevelt button which he had hammered into the approximate shape and size of a 5-cent piece.

Petain Hints He'll End Colonial Revolt

Text of His Speech Urging Frenchmen To Work With Axis

Frenchmen:

Last Thursday I met the Chancellor of the Reich.

"This meeting aroused hopes and provoked some disquietude.

I owe you some explanations on this matter.

Such an interview was possible four months after the defeat of our arms, thanks to the dignity of Frenchmen during their hour of trial, thanks to the immense effort at regeneration for which they are ready, thanks also to the heroism of our sailors, the energy of our colonial leaders, the loyalty of our native populations.

France has revived. This first meeting between the conqueror and conquered marks the first step in the recovery of our country.

I answered the invitation of the Fuehrer freely.

Used No Pressure

On his part he forced me to no dictate, no pressure.

Collaboration was envisaged between our two countries. I accepted it in principle. Means will be discussed later.

To all those who today await the health of France I must say that this health is first in our hands.

To those whose honorable scruples have separated them from our way of thinking I must say that the first duty of every Frenchman is to have confidence.

To those who doubt, and to those who abstain, I point out they overdo stiffness, that the finest attitudes of reserve and pride risk losing force.

Those who took the destinies of France in hand have a duty to create a most favorable attitude to safeguard the interests of the country.

It is with honor and to maintain French unity—the unity of ten centuries—in constructive activity of the new European order that I enter today the road to collaboration.

In the near future the suffering of our country may be lightened, the fate of our prisoners ameliorated, the charges of occupation eased. The line of demarcation may be relaxed and the administration of food supply and of territory may be facilitated.

Armistice Is Not Peace

This collaboration must be sincere. It must be exclusive of all thoughts of aggression. It must be carried out with patient, confident effort.

The armistice is not peace. France is held by numerous obligations to the conqueror. At least she remains sovereign. This sovereignty imposes the duty of defending her soil, extinguishing divergences of opinion and reducing dissidence of the colonies.

This policy is mine.

Ministers are responsible only to me. I alone will be judged by history.

Up to now I have used the language of a father. Today I address you in the language of a chief.

Follow me. Keep your confidence in eternal France.

984 Are Summoned From New England To Report Nov. 18

legality of the lottery on which the whole program depends.

Clarence A. Dykstra, selective service director, said he had been informed a Detroit youth had threatened suit because of a double mixup in the drawing. When it was discovered eight numbers apparently were missing, these numbers—6,542, 7,192, 7,635, 1,033, 5,108, 6,771, 1,835, and 7,839—were inserted in capsules, drawn and given order numbers 8,995 through 9,002.

Then it was found 1,033 and 6,771 actually had been drawn in the earlier lottery, so they were cancelled from the later drawing and reverted to their former places in order. It was understood the Detroit man might contest the lottery on the basis of that mixup.

"After all," said Dykstra, commenting on the report, "this was a lottery and even the position of the last six numbers was as much chance as any of the others."

A quandary also was faced by members of the National Guard, who were not required to register but who have no means of identifying themselves as exempt. To avoid the possibility of their running afoul of zealous law enforcement officers after registration cards are issued, they will be provided with identification cards, at least in the District, Gen. Cox said.

After questionnaires have been received, the job of classifying the registrants and weeding out those with dependents, those needed in essential industry and those with physical disabilities will begin and conscientious objectors will be given a hearing. Eligibles then will be called in the order in which they were drawn and conscientious objectors may be required to spend a year in nonmilitary work of national importance.

In order to aid Washington men called in the Selective Service later, the Registrants Advisory Board of the District of Columbia, composed of Spencer Gordon, chairman; Charles Wilson, vice chairman; Stanley Willis, Howard S. LeRoy and Charles H. Houston yesterday announced they had appointed the following additional associate members:

Area 9—Arthur Hellon, Colorado Building, in place of Harold H. Shaller.

Area 13—J. Franklin Wilson, 2000 Eleventh Street Northwest, in place of Henry Lincoln Johnson.

Area 18—Israel J. Mandelson, Colorado Building; residence, 3838 Fulton Street Northwest, in place of Milton F. Broome.

Area 21—Robert R. Faulkner, Shoreham Building; residence, 1000 Taylor Street Northeast, in place of George L. Boswell.

Area 25—F. G. Awalt, 822 Connecticut Avenue Northwest; residence 2923 Thirty-fourth Street Northwest; George A. Parker, 1922 Thirteenth Street Northwest; residence, 2441 M Street Northwest, and James A. Cobb, 613 F Street Northwest; residence, 1732 S Street Northwest.

Meanwhile Adjt. Gen. Edgar H. Taber, of the National Association of Regulars addressed a letter to the Secretary of War suggesting that the 99 hostesses who are to be appointed by the department to arrange entertainments for young men entering the Army through the Selective Service Act be drawn from the ranks of the widows of former service men. Gen. Taber stated: "We believe that the young men concerned will have more respect for and thus be more cooperative with women whom they know have known and cared for service men in the past."

Salonika Confirms Reports of British Landings in Greece

fortified island of Skarpanto.

The attack surprised the Italians, sleeping in a barracks, and only 200 escaped, these informants said. The barracks and a wireless station were reported destroyed. The Italian dead, it was said, were buried hastily in a ditch.

Possibly in September

[This attack may have been the one the British reported on Skarpanto by its Mediterranean fleet early in September. Another of the Dodecanese group, Stampalia, has been both shelled and bombed in the last months.

[The British air force's strong attacks on the Dodecanese, particularly the recent bombing of Matlezans on the Island of Stampalia, were reported vastly to have reduced Italy's striking power from that direction, the United Press said.

[The Italian airdrome at Maritza, bombed three times, was said to have been shattered and a transport depot, hangars, a dozen planes and office buildings were said to have been destroyed.]

Taking advantage of the lack of Italian activity, Greek military authorities mobilized every vehicle with wheels and rushed soldiers and material to the front in a manner reminiscent of the Paris taxicab army of 1914.

The first Greek soldiers wounded in the early action have begun to arrive at the base hospitals here, but the defenders' casualties thus far are considered surprisingly few.

Here in Saloniki, the people alternately watched the sea, hoping for the approach of British warships, and the skies, in fear of the arrival of Italian bombers. The public is calm and orderly.

The streets are filled with a great coming and going of military vehicles and in the shops and cafes the public is expressing enthusiasm for Britain and a determination to defend this country.

All sorts of motor cars—not excepting taxicabs—are in military service, carrying men to the front to defend the Metaxas line—a line against which the people here declare that the Italians are making little progress.

I arrived here after crossing the Greek and Yugoslav borders by railway handcar and freight car, all regular passenger traffic having been cut off.

Islands Well-Guarded

Cairo, Egypt, Oct. 30 (AP).—Britain's sea-borne aid to Greece will be able to flow through a maze of well-fortified points established in the Aegean Islands and on the Greek mainland, Greek leaders disclosed tonight.

They are so solidly ringed with guns that they can be held indefinitely and there are so many of them that there still will be plenty of ports of entry to the British even if some withdrawals are necessary, these informants said.

They asserted the islands will be held to provide a solid triangle with Alexandria, Cyprus, and Haifa in which the British can have complete sea control, thus erecting a formidable barrier between the Axis and the shores of Egypt and Asia Minor.

These leaders predicted slow Greek withdrawal operations would hold up the Italians for several weeks, giving the British time to establish themselves in Greece.

British Reinforced

Copyright by New York Times

London, Oct. 30.—An indication that the weak British forces in the Near East have been powerfully reinforced was given by Minister of Economic Warfare R. H. Cross today who said that the biggest task of the merchant navy in recent months was the reinforcement and maintenance of troops in the Middle East. Great quantities of tonnage was required for this purpose, he said, declaring 100,000 tons of stores had been shipped since the end of June.

Harold Nicolson, parliamentary secretary of the ministry of information, tonight said that British responsibilities in the Mediterranean were heavy. We must underestimate the power and skill, equipment and courage of our enemies," he said.

Hitler, Nicolson said, had not abandoned his idea of invasion but if it came now it would be "the suicidal fling of a desperate man." The object of the latest Axis move was not to win the war but to keep from losing it, Nicolson said.

Pennsylvanian Leaders of Both Parties Subpenaed

Philadelphia, Oct. 30 (AP).—Top leaders of both major parties in Pennsylvania, including Joseph N. Pew and Democratic State Chairman Meredith Meyers, were summoned today to appear November 7—two days after the election—before a Federal grand jury investigating alleged election law violations.

Subpenas were issued for Pew Republican leader and industrialist; Jay Cooke, Republican candidate for the United States Senate and city chairman of Philadelphia; John B. Kelly, Democratic city chairman; James F. Torrance, Republican State chairman; Luther A. Harr, Democratic State campaign manager, and Meyers.

Also subpenaed, by title, were the treasurers of the city and State committees of both parties, the chairman and treasurer of the Willkie Clubs, the chairman and treasurer of the Democrats-for-Willkie organization, and the chairman and treasurer of the Republicans for Roosevelt.

Increase of 500 Ships Foreseen for Airlines

New York, Oct. 30 (AP).—Edgar S. Gorrell, president of the Air Transport Association of America, said today that the Nation's airlines would require 500 more transport planes between now and the middle of 1942 to accommodate increased business.

He told A. T. A. members at their annual meeting that "on a minute's notice the airlines must be ready to provide necessary cargo and transport complement to the Army's G. H. Q. air force."

How Accurate Was the Gallup Poll in 1936?

In the final poll published just before the 1936 election Dr. Gallup predicted that 31 States were certain to vote for Roosevelt, 3 certain for Landon. Fourteen States were too close for accurate prediction. In the actual election, all but two States—Maine and Vermont—voted for Roosevelt. Gallup was wrong about New Hampshire being certain for Roosevelt.

Gallup predicted that Roosevelt would get 55.7% of the major party vote. He actually got 62.2%, so Gallup underestimated Roosevelt's popular vote by 6.5%. (The figure of 4.3%, previously used in The Post, was in error—caused by a confusion of the total vote and the major party vote figures.)

The 1936 election was the first test of the accuracy of the Gallup Polls. The lessons of this election have aided Gallup in increasing the accuracy of the polls since that time. Most famous example was the New York State election of 1938 when Gallup predicted that Lehman would get 50.2% of the votes cast for Governor—and Lehman actually got 50%.

Twelve times since 1936 the Gallup Polls were tested by an actual election. Twelve times Gallup was correct in his prediction of who would win! Here are the polls and the election results:

Election	Poll Forecast of Winner and %	Election Result
Maine Senat'l (1940)	Brewster 62%	Brewster 58%
Maine Guber'l (1940)	Sewall 68%	Sewell 64%
N. Y. Guber'l (1938)	Lehman 50.2%	Lehman 50%
Congressional (1938)	Dems., win 264 sts.	Dems. won 258 sts.
Maine Guber'l (1938)	Barrows 78%	Barrows 75%
Ga. Primary (1938)	George 46%	George 44%

Why Gallup's Accuracy Is Even Greater Now

One of the lessons learned during the 1936 election was the greater accuracy of personal interviews than mail questionnaires. As a result, Gallup abandoned the mail questionnaires entirely and enlarged his crew of interviewers.

Another discovery was the importance of polling right up to election day. In 1936 Gallup did not poll during the last week and failed to note the surge toward Roosevelt during the final days of the campaign.

In 1940 Gallup will have his interviewers continue polling right up to the last. The State-by-State round-up which you'll find in Monday's Post will be based on interviewers' reports wired in to Gallup headquarters on Sunday afternoon!

We'll Put Our Money on POWER

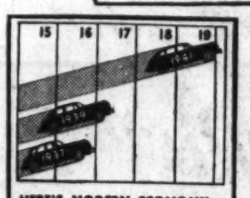
of America's Most Powerful Standard-Production Engine

Basic source of this engine's peak power is the FIREBALL design which compacts the fuel charge into the shape of a flattened ball around the spark. Fired from its heart under higher compression pressure, each charge lets go with heavier wallop that extracts more power from each charge of fuel. Amplifying this is Compound Carburetion, in which the usual large carburetor is replaced by two smaller mixers teamed to work together. Only one of these carburetors functions in normal driving. The other cuts in automatically whenever it is needed to provide extra power, shuts off when the need is past. Result: Actually more power from less gasoline.



HERE'S MODERN ECONOMY—You can see how Compound Carburetion steps up miles-per-gallon in this chart. It shows the mileage at 50 miles an hour for our 1937 SPECIAL, our 1939 SPECIAL and the 1941 SPECIAL with Compound Carburetion.

THERE are two ways you can go about engineering an automobile.

You can think it out or you can tinker it out.

You can get right down to the tough job of building better, livelier, abler performance into the engine—or you can fiddle around with expedients that seem to do the job.

It is plain, of course, that the sole source of car performance is the power plant.

And all engineers know that if you build in enough power and flexibility you can get the thrilling kind of performance car owners want—pull, pick-up, hill-climbing, economical gear ratios, even less need for changing gears.

The one thing that has stood in the way has been the difficulty of getting this power without also increasing the size of the engine.

Now, sweating out more power from the same size engine and the same amount of fuel is a down-to-earth, hard-work job.

But—it's the right and proper way to get the wanted result without falling back on extra mechanisms that complicate chassis design.

And that's what Buick engineers have done.

They have concentrated their 1941 creative thought on providing greater and more flexible power in the engine itself.

They have done this through FIREBALL design and Compound Carburetion—and what they've accomplished for you boils down to this:

You get more power—eight, eighteen or twenty-four more horsepower from the same size engines as last year—power that gets you off like a bullet and sweeps you up a hill like a fighter plane "going upstairs."

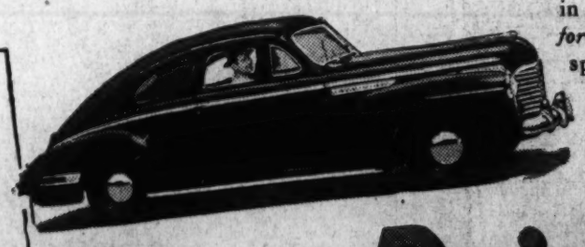
You get more mileage—from all engines and at all speeds—as much as 10% to 15% more miles per gallon and the benefits of overdrive all the time you are in "high."

You get easier car handling—less gear changing from a tremendous power reserve that pulls the hills and negotiates traffic without the necessity of dropping into lower gear ratios.

You get greater safety—from quick pick-up that lifts you surely out of tight spots, and from the full and immediate braking power of your engine without the "lag" while liquid couplings and the like readjust themselves.

Finally you get a chassis that is clean, simple and direct in design—uncluttered by intricate mechanisms that are hard to service and difficult to repair.

In brief, you get basic improvement in your car's capacity for performance—and when you're spending several hundred dollars for an automobile, that's important enough to look into.



BUICK PRICES BEGIN AT $935 for the Business Coupe delivered at Flint, Mich. Transportation based on rail rates, state and local taxes (if any), optional equipment and accessories—extra. Prices subject to change without notice.

2 French Officials Tell of Detention

Vichy Agents Here After British Hold Them at Antigua

Two high officials of the French colonial service—Gov. Gen. Jules Carde and Administrator of Colonies Pierre Revoil—arrived in Washington yesterday after being "detained" by British authorities on the West Indian island of Antigua for a month.

The detention of M. Carde and M. Revoil, who were making a tour of French colonies in the New World for the Vichy government, caused great indignation in Martinique. They had left Martinique on September 30 and were on their way to Miami on a Pan-American Airways "baby clipper" when, during a brief stop at Antigua, the British authorities arrested them.

Revoil, whose mother was English, told The Post that the British officials at Antigua treated them courteously and did everything to make them comfortable.

"But they did not tell us why we were detained," he said. "In fact, we do not know yet."

The two men visited the French Embassy after their arrival here on an Eastern Airlines transport. They will remain a few days, then go on to New York to fly across the Atlantic.

DON'T KNOW WHY THEY WERE ARRESTED—Gov. Gen. Jules Carde and Administrator of Colonies Pierre Revoil, who were arrested by British authorities on the West Indian island of Antigua, are shown on their arrival yesterday in Washington. British Feel Kennedy May Sway Election

Paper Finds His Talk True Picture Of War Situation

London, Oct. 31 (Thursday) (AP).—The London Daily Mail commented approvingly today on Ambassador Kennedy's speech in the United States of Tuesday night, and said his "intervention at this stage may sway the approaching election decisively in favor of the President."

"What Joseph Kennedy has to say to the American people clearly and accurately represents the British view," said the paper.

"It is this: the armed forces of Britain are America's first line of defense against Nazi invasion. Those forces are fighting not only for the life of the British Empire but for the survival of Western democracy.

"In return for that service Britain requires the utmost help the United States can give.

And Faster

"We want all the equipment America can send. We want more than we are getting and we want it faster.

"Our enemies could not stand against a Britain armed to the teeth, backed by the United States with her vast potential war production at full stretch.

"A speedup of her output would be worth more to us than an expeditionary force of 1,000,000 men. An American declaration of war at this stage would be of no help to us. It would divert vital supplies from our own lines to the home front of the United States.

"America is nominally neutral. In reality she is a nonbelligerent ally and her part is not merely to sell us surplus material but to plan production to supply our urgent war needs.

Learn By Experience

"By intensive rearmament and by aiding Britain the United States hopes to keep out of war. She stands in relation to this country in the same position as Britain stood in relation to Europe three years ago and she has learned from our bitter experience.

"If Britain had rearmed intensively then we, too, might have kept out of war.

"That was Mr. Kennedy's message to the American people, given with all the emphasis of his experience as Ambassador to Britain.

"It supports the policy of Mr. Roosevelt and the Ambassador's intervention at this stage may sway the approaching election decisively in favor of the President."

Judge Refuses To Direct Acquittal Of Death Driver

Richard S. Nestlerode, 26, yesterday lost his motion to have the Districtrict Court jury trying him on two murder charges instructed to return a verdict of not guilty.

Overruling contentions of defense counsel that the Government failed to prove Nestlerode acted "with malice" when his car killed two pedestrians, Justice James W. Morris ordered Nestlerode to proceed with his defense.

Victims of the traffic accidents were Mrs. Edna Mitchell, 34, colored, and Joseph Nappo, 57, Assistant District Attorney Arthur B. Caldwell said he would ask for the maximum, two life sentences, on the second degree murder indictments.

Attorneys Levi H. David and J. Benjamin Simmons will open their defense today.

Flynn Implies GOP 'Smeared' Warm Springs Foundation

By Scott Hershey
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Oct. 30.—Democratic and Republican leaders both denounced today a circular attacking the Georgia Warm Springs Foundation as a "private business operated for profit."

The circular, which Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn called "the filthiest thing that has ever been done in American politics," bore the letterhead: "Independent Young Americans, Inc., W. E. Porter, chairman."

Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., Republican national chairman, condemned the circular and said that it had no connection whatsoever with the Republican organization. He said he knew nothing about the organization which had distributed it.

"The Republicans may deny they had anything to do with this," Flynn said at a specially-called press conference, "but the fact remains this statement is being released simultaneously all over the country. If they don't know about it, they don't know what's going on."

Calls It "Malicious"

In a prepared statement, Flynn added:

"The last-minute broadside of smell bombs has begun to appear in the Willkie camp . . . number one, I present to you a proclamation issued by the 'Independent Young Americans, Inc.,' of this city.

"It presents that the Georgia Warm Springs Foundation instead of being the great humanitarian institution this country knows it is, and in which millions of Americans have participated—'which' in the language of the proclamation 'has been presented to the American public as a charity and philanthropy of Franklin D. Roosevelt, is in reality a private business operated for profit.'

"The document concludes with this statement: 'We demand a Congressional investigation of this ugly exploitation of disease and misery. Could anything be more malicious?'"

Flynn was visibly angered as he commented on the circular. "The only reason this circular is being brought out is to try to smear Roosevelt," he said. "I am charging that it is an evidence of the smear campaign that has been carried on."

Pryor Issues Denial

Samuel F. Pryor, jr., Eastern Republican campaign manager, added his denial to Martin's that the Republican organization had any knowledge of the pamphlet.

"Flynn's attempt to connect this pamphlet with the Republican organization is one of the oldest things in machine politics," Pryor said. "We know nothing about it and Chairman Martin has strongly denounced it."

Flynn told his press conference that the Republicans "intend to buy this election, and the evidence is pretty positive that Mr. Pew (Joseph N. Pew, Pennsylvania Republican leader) has raised $2,000,000 to buy the election in Pennsylvania."

The Democratic chairman likewise condemned a letter which he said the Howard County Republican Committee of Indiana, addressed to all conscription registrants, telling them they were being drafted for war and urging them to vote for the program that assures the greatest chance to continue at peace.

Martin, at his press conference, asserted that the Administration was permitting American Ambassadors and Ministers to return to this country to "ask votes to save their own jobs, rather than putting forth efforts to keep the United States out of war."

Martin said that although the President continually stressed the gravity of the international situation, the United States has no Ambassador at present in London, Paris, Brussels, Berlin or Rome.

Pew Calls Charge "Absurd"

Philadelphia, Oct. 30 (AP).—Joseph N. Pew, jr., termed "absurd" tonight a statement of Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn that Pew had raised $2,000,000 to "buy" a Republican victory in Pennsylvania.

"Boss Flynn's charges are of course absurd," the Sun Oil Co. executive said in a statement. "He is apparently so close to the Federal Treasury that a couple of ciphers mean nothing to him."

War Office Fire Clews Sought

age three or four daily. These are extinguished without calling the District Fire Department in the daytime; at night an immediate outside alarm is sounded for any fire.

There was no evidence of defective wiring in the wing.

Mimeographs Destroyed

The only damage by fire, other than that to the unoccupied fourth floor, was in the mimeograph room of the Quartermaster General's department on the first floor. There approximately half of the duplicating machines were destroyed and the rooms gutted. It was ascertained fire was transmitted from the fourth floor to building material piled in the yard and from that to an awning of the mimeograph room.

On the third floor of the wing, the office of the Signal Intelligence Service was flooded and several offices of the Air Corps were "inconvenienced by water." No important papers were reported lost.

The Adjutant General's School and Air Corps offices on the second floor suffered from water damage to papers. In the Intelligence office on the same floor, papers were "dampened."

"Heavy inconvenience" by water and wet papers was felt by the Signal Procurement Planning branch on the first floor. The photostat and blueprint room of the quartermaster general's office was not damaged.

Work in the Signal Corps message center was only briefly interrupted.

Army Guards Wreckage

The fire was discovered simultaneously by a building guard and the operating engineer, who turned in an alarm. So great headway had the flames gained and so rapidly were they spreading that a general alarm, bringing all available apparatus to the scene, was sounded. Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff, arrived at the height of the fire from his home at Fort Myer and ordered details of soldiers from nearby posts to throw a cordon about the building.

Yesterday War Department employes worked as usual in other wings while Infantry from Washington Cantonment and cavalrymen from Fort Myer stood guard at all entrances to the burned wing. Overhead the buckled steel still smoked and damp paper fluttered in offices throughout the building, drying out.

On all three floors of the third wing, workmen struggled with the job of cleaning out the water and the debris and by noon many offices were again in operation. When the fourth floor could be occupied was problematical; it will have to be rebuilt, from steelwork outward.

As soon as the wing could be entered, a board from the Public Buildings Administration began its investigation. Headed by Robert D. Trussell, PBA fire marshal, it included R. R. Galloway, chief of the technical division of the PBA; Charles Overman, group superintendent of Interior Groups, and Inspectator E. C. Duncan, of the PBA.

Trussell said his board probably would have its report ready this morning. He said the cause of the fire had not yet been determined.

Another board, of Army officers, was appointed yesterday morning by the commander of the Washington Provisional Brigade. It consists of Col. Oswald H. Saunders, commanding the Twelfth Infantry, Arlington Cantonment; Lieut. Col. Milton B. Halsey, Twelfth Infantry; Lieut. Col. Everett M. Yon, Washington Provisional Brigade; Lieut. Col. John J. Bohn, Third Cavalry, Fort Myer, and Maj. Thomas Q. Donaldson, Third Cavalry.

Bureau Heads Get to Figuring How Staffs Will Weather Draft

By Edward Ryan

The business of asking "what's your number" became a serious administrative problem for Government office chiefs yesterday after the end of the draft lottery.

Until yesterday the Government's administrators had been using statistical estimates to figure out how many of their employes are likely to be called for military service in the first year.

The estimates in several agencies showed not much to worry about. In the Social Security Board, with about 12,000 employes, officials predicted that 4,000 were in the draft age, and 100 were likely to be called in the first year. Of the 3,353 Census annex employes in the age limits, about 125 are likely to be called by March 1, according to their estimates.

The job starting yesterday for personnel men in the Government agencies was to check these estimates against what the lottery actually did to their employes.

In the Commerce Department, bureau chiefs were asked to survey their employes and find out where the eligible men stood in the national lottery and on their local draft board lists. Their surveys, it was explained, will become the starting point for deciding which of the employes likely to be called should be recommended for deferment, because of his job.

The Agriculture Department, with about 95,000 employes throughout the country, has been checking up on the draft chances for several weeks, to work out the deferment policy, and find out how many new workers will be needed to replace those called for military service.

Other agencies were working on similar surveys, and in the Federal Security Agency word has gone out for employes to report to their supervisors when they receive the draft questionnaires, the signal that they are in line to be called.

One question reported puzzling some Government employes already in defense jobs was the possibility that they might be drafted for military service, then because of their specialized training assigned at military pay to the same job they had held as civilians. Basis of this concern were revivals of World War stories like that of a Coast and Geodetic Survey mapmaker drafted from his civilian job, then assigned back to the Coast and Geodetic Survey at military pay.

From Government personnel officers, war officials and officers at Selective Service headquarters, the answer to problems like this was that the mistakes of the World War draft are unlikely to happen again. Using the mapmaker as an example, officials pointed out, that this time he would not likely be called if he pointed out on his draft questionnaire the job he was holding, and the defense nature of the work.

In cases like this, officials said, the central policy is to avoid taking people into military service who are already serving well in jobs important to defense. While the interpretation of this policy might vary among the 6,200 local draft boards, the Government appeals agents assigned to each of the boards would be on hand to keep the policy working.

One mathematician, who examined the draft lottery's order of numbers, called in with this report about its effect on the laws of chance.

More than 300 numbers were pulled before there was one drawn in the 1000-2000 series. The mathematical chance of this, he said, was 1 in 1,000,000,000,000,000,000. His conclusion was that the shuffling was incomplete.

Secretary Knox told his press conference yesterday that the Navy's Wage Board report on pay scales in the navy yards and other field establishments is about to be released, but declined to say exactly how soon.

Knox said he had acted on the report, and added that delay in releasing it was the result of some negotiation. He said he did not want to discuss the difficulties that remained to be ironed out before its publication.

Lee Muck, assistant to Secretary Ickes in charge of land utilization, tomorrow will get the staff to go with his job as boss of one-seventh of the Nation's land area. These public lands have been under the Interior Department, but until the President's reorganization order last spring, conservation work on them was under the Agriculture Department. Officials have been working since summer to untangle the conservation set-up and shift the new functions to the Interior Department. Tomorrow, the last of the employes being transferred, 425 field workers, will go off the Agriculture pay roll and on that of the Interior Department.

Text of Roosevelt's Boston Speech Replying to Charges of Defense Laxity

G. O. P. Record In Congress Is Assailed

President Cites Figures to Disprove Willkie Accusations

Boston, Oct. 30 (AP).—The text of President Roosevelt's address tonight at the Boston Garden follows:

I've had a glorious day here in New England. I've looked forward to coming here to Boston. But there's one thing about this trip that I regret. I have to return to Washington tonight, without getting a chance to go into my two favorite States—Maine and Vermont.

In New York City, I showed by the cold print of the Congressional Record how Republican leaders, with their votes and their speeches, have been playing, and still are playing politics with National defense.

Even during the past three years, when the dangers to all forms of Democracy throughout the world have been obvious, the Republican team in the Congress has been acting only as a party team.

Time after time, Republican leadership refused to see that what this country needs is an all-American team.

These side-lines critics are now saying that we are not doing enough for our national defense. I say we are going full speed ahead!

Our Navy is our outer line of defense.

Almost the very minute that this Administration came into office we began to build the Navy up—to build a bigger Navy.

In seven years we have raised the total of 193 ships in commission to 337 in commission today.

119 Ships Under Construction

We have 119 more ships under construction today.

In seven years we raised the personnel of the Navy from 106,000 to 210,000 today.

You good people here in Boston know of the enormous increase of productive work in your Boston Navy Yard. There are now six times as many men employed in all our Navy Yards as there were in 1933. The private ship-building yards are also humming with activity—building ships for our Navy and for our expanding Merchant Marine.

The construction of this Navy has been a monumental job. In spite of what some campaign orators may tell you, you cannot buy a battleship from a mail order catalogue.

We have not only added ships and men to the Navy. We have enormously increased the effectiveness of naval bases in our outlying territories.

Our objective is to keep any potential attacker as far from our continental shores as we can.

And within the past two months your Government has acquired new naval and air bases in British territory in the Atlantic Ocean. They extend all the way from Newfoundland to that part of South America where the Atlantic Ocean begins to get narrow, with Africa not far away.

I repeat: Our objective is to keep any potential attacker as far from our continental shores as we can.

That is the record of the growth of our Navy. In 1933 a weak Navy; in 1940 a strong Navy. Sideline critics may carp in a campaign. But Americans are mighty proud of that record. Americans will put their country first and partisanship second.

And speaking of partishanship, I remind you—when the naval expansion bill came up in 1938, the vast majority of Republican members of the Congress voted against building any additional battleships.

What kind of political shenanigans are these?

Size of Army Doubled

We are also expanding our Army. Under normal conditions we have no need for a large Army. But unprecedented dangers require unprecedented action to guard the peace of America against unprecedented threats.

Since the day when Poland was invaded, we have more than doubled the size of our Regular Army. Adding to this the federalized National Guardsmen, our armed forces now equal more than 436,000 enlisted men.

The officers and men of our Army and National Guard are the finest in the world.

They will be the nucleus for training the young men who are being called under the Selective Service Act.

Gen. Marshall has said that the task of training these young men is a "profound privilege."

Campaign orators seek to tear down the morale of the American people when they make false statements about the Army's equipment. I say we are supplying our Army with the best fighting equipment in the world.

The Defense Commission is getting things done with speed and efficiency. More than $8,000,000,000 of defense contracts have been let.

I am afraid that these campaign orators will pretty soon be under the painful necessity of eating their words.

The most inexcusable unpatriotic misstatement of fact about our Army is the brazen charge that the men called to training will not be properly housed.

The plain fact is that construction of Army housing is far ahead of schedule to meet all present needs, and that by January 5, next, there will be complete and adequate housing for nine hundred and thirty thousand soldiers.

Speaks to Mothers and Fathers

I give assurance to the mothers and fathers of America that each and every one of their boys in training will be well-housed.

Throughout the one-year of their training, there will be constant promotion of their health and well being.

And while I am talking to you mothers and fathers, I give you one more assurance.

I have said this before, but I shall say it again:

Your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign wars.

They are going into training to form a force so strong that, by its very existence, it will keep the threat of war far away from our shores.

The purpose of our defense is defense.

The Republican campaign orators who moan and groan about our Army and Navy are even more mournful about our strength in the air. But only last year, 1939, the Republicans in the Congress were voting in favor of reducing appropriations for the Army and Navy Air Corps.

What kind of political shenanigans are these?

Can such people be trusted with national defense?

I stress particularly what every Army and Navy flier tells us—that what counts most in sustained air power is the productive capacity of our airplane factories.

We are determined to attain a production capacity of 50,000 planes a year in the United States. Day and night we are working and making rapid progress toward that goal.

You citizens of Seattle who are listening tonight—you have watched the Boeing plant grow. It is producing four times as many planes each month as it was producing a year ago.

Factory Output Doubled

You citizens of Southern California can see the great Douglas factories. They have doubled their output in that period.

You citizens of Buffalo and St. Louis can see the Curtiss plants in your cities. Their output has jumped to twelve times its level of a year ago.

And, of course, I don't need to tell you anything about the quality of the men who fly these planes!

You citizens of Hartford who hear my words: Look across the Connecticut River at the whirring wheels and the beehive of activity which is the Pratt and Whitney plant which I saw today. A year ago this plant was producing airplane engines totaling 100,000 horsepower a month. Today this production has been stepped up tenfold, stepped up to 1,000,000 horsepower a month.

And you citizens of Paterson, N. J., you can see the Curtiss-Wright plant which a year ago produced 270,000 horsepower a month and this October is producing 859,000 horsepower.

In ten months we have increased our engine output 240 per cent.

And we are building brand new plants for airplanes and airplane engines in centers in the Middle West, far from the coast.

Last spring and winter this great production capacity program was stepped up by orders from overseas. In taking these orders for planes to go overseas, we are following heard-headed self-interest.

Building on the foundation provided by these orders, the British are now receiving a steady stream of airplanes. After three months of blitzkrieg in the air, the strength of the Royal Air Force is actually greater now than when the attack began. This increase in strength despite battle losses is due in part to the purchases made from American airplane industries.

British Seek More Planes

The British have now asked for permission to negotiate again with American manufacturers for 12,000 additional planes. I have asked that the request be given most sympathetic consideration by the priorities board consisting of William S. Knudsen, Edward R. Stettinius, jr., and Leon Henderson.

When these additional orders are approved, they will bring Britain's present orders for military planes from the United States to more than 26,000. They will require still more new plant facilities, so that the present program of building planes for military purposes both for the United States and Great Britain will not be interrupted.

Also, large additional orders are being negotiated for artillery, machine guns, rifles, and tanks, with equipment and ammunition. The plant capacity necessary to produce all of this military equipment is and will be available to serve the needs of the United States in any emergency.

The productive capacity of the United States, which has made it the greatest industrial country in the world, will not fail now. It will make us the strongest air power in the world. And that is not just a campaign promise!

I have been glad to welcome back to our own shores that Boston boy, beloved by all of Boston, my Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, Joe Kennedy.

Actually on the scene where planes were fighting and bombs dropping, for many months he has been telling me just what you and I have visualized from afar—that all the smaller independent nations of Europe—Sweden, Switzerland, Greece, Ireland, and the others—have lived in terror of the destruction of their independence by Nazi military might.

Defenses Need Support

We can build up our armed defenses to their highest peak of efficiency, but they will still be inadequate unless we support them with a strong national morale, a strong economy, a sense of solidarity and economic justice.

When this Administration came to office, the foundation of our national morale was crumbling. In the panic and misery of those days no democracy could have built up an adequate armed defense.

What we have done since 1933 has been written in terms of improvement in the daily life and work of the common man.

I have discussed the falsifications which Republican campaign orators have been making about the economic condition of the country—the condition of labor and the condition of business.

They are even more ridiculous when they shed those old crocodile tears over the plight of the farmer.

Now, if there is anyone that a Republican candidate loves more than the laboring man in November, it is the farmer.

And the first one he forgets after election day is the farmer.

Do I have to remind you of the plight of the farmer during the period between 1920 and 1933—declining income, accumulating surpluses, rising farm debts—10-cent corn, 20-cent wheat, 5-cent cotton, 3-cent hogs.

They did nothing to stop this slide. But, of course, before every election day they always uncorked the old bottle of soothing sirup and spread it thick.

The farmers of America know from the record what the state of American agriculture is today.

Here it is:

Farm income this year is just about double what is was in 1932.

Farm buying power this year is greater than it was even in 1929.

Foreclosures Averted

Tens of thousands of farms have been saved from foreclosure.

More than 800,000 low income farmers have obtained credit from the Government, which they could get nowhere else.

Over a million farms have been electrified since 1933.

Over 6,000,000 farmers have received benefit payments of more than three and a half billion dollars.

What does all this add up to? It means an agriculture which is strong and vigorous.

And we all know how much this is due to the patient efforts and practical vision of Henry Wallace.

The people of New England know that if the farmers' income had remained what it was in 1932, they would be buying fewer shoes, fewer watches and ice boxes, less woolen goods and cotton goods than they are buying now. Prosperous farmers mean more employment. More prosperity for the workers and business men of New England, and of every industrial area in America.

Parity—the proper relationship between agriculture and the rest of our economy—will continue to be our guiding principle.

We now have great stocks of wheat, corn and cotton—in a sense really strategic materials in a world threatened with war.

Surpluses not needed for reserves are now being used to feed the hungry and the ill-nourished and that is a fact difficult for Republican orators to deny.

School Luncheon Program

Our school luncheon program will this year reach three million children with milk and other foods. And milk does those children much more good than political soothing syrup.

While this was being done, what were the Republican leaders doing? Here is the record:

In 1933, Republicans in Congress, in both Houses, voted against the first Agricultural Adjustment Act by 88 to 52.

In 1936, they voted against the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act by 75 to 25.

In 1938, they voted against the second Agricultural Adjustment by 84 to 15.

And even in 1940, they voted against parity payments to farmers by 143 to 32.

In the spring of this year, they voted overwhelmingly against the stamp plan to distribute food to needy people through private grocery stores.

The American farmers will not be deceived by pictures of old guard candidates, patting cows and pitching hay in front of moving picture cameras.

All the sweet words of the Republican leaders in Philadelphia last June—they were not worth the paper they were written on.

For listen to this. Last summer, only a few weeks after the Republican national platform had been adopted indorsing commodity loans for the farmers, the Republican members of the House marched right back into the halls of Congress and voted against the commodity loans for the farmers. They voted against them by a vote of 106 to 37.

Attacks Martin Record

Among the Republican leaders who voted against that bill and against practically every other farm bill was the present chairman of the Republican National Committee, that "peerless leader," the "farmers' friend"—Congressman Joe Martin, of Massachusetts.

He is of national interest now because at the time of his appointment as Republican national chairman, this handsome verbal bouquet, this expensive orchid, was pinned upon him: "In public life for many years, Joe Martin has represented all that is finest in American public life."

Considering the source of that orchid, Martin may be slated for some Cabinet post. So let's look at the voting record of this Representative of what they call, "all that is finest in American public life."

Martin voted against the Public Utility Holding Company Act, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the National Securities Exchange Act and the extension of the CCC. He voted against practically all relief and work relief measures, and against the appropriation for rural electrification.

Martin voted against the Civil Service Extension Act and against the United States Housing Act.

What I particularly want to say on the radio to the farmers of the Nation is that Republican National Chairman Martin voted against every single one of the farm measures recommended by this Administration. Perhaps he will be rewarded for this loyal service to the principles of his party by being appointed Secretary of Agriculture.

He is one of that great historic trio which has voted consistently against every measure for the relief of agriculture, Martin, Barton and Fish.

I have to let you in on a secret. It will come as a great surprise to you. It's this:

I'm enjoying this campaign. I'm really having a fine time.

I think you know that the office of President has not been an easy one during the past years.

National Spirit Revived

The tragedies of this distracted world have weighed heavily upon all of us.

But—there is revival for every one of us in the sight of our own national community.

In our own American community we have sought to submerge all of the old hatreds, all the old fears, of the Old World.

We are Anglo-Saxon and Latin, we are Irish and Teuton and Jewish and Scandinavian and Slav—we are American. We belong to many races and colors and creeds—we are American.

And it seems to me that we are most completely, most loudly most proudly American around Election Day.

Because it is then that we can assert ourselves—voters and candidates alike. We can assert the most glorious, the most encouraging fact in the world today—the fact that democracy is alive—it is alive and going strong.

We are telling the world that we are free—and we intend to main free and at peace.

We are free to live and love and laugh.

We face the future with confidence and courage. We are American.

President Invades New England

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

INSPECTS ARSENAL—President Roosevelt, on campaign tour of New England, yesterday visited the arsenal at Springfield, Mass. Brig. Gen. Gilbert Stewart explained the arsenal's problems to the President

Text of President's Address in Hartford

Hartford, Oct. 30 (AP).—Here is the text of President Roosevelt's address here today:

This is a very good omen. If you will remember, four years ago I was on this spot and it was a rainy day. And you remember what Connecticut did the next day.

You know, I was saying to your Senator that, where I live, on the back of my farm I can look into Connecticut. I know almost every road and every community in this State and so I have always thought of you in this State as my neighbors.

I want to say just two very simple things: First of all, this is the great insurance center of the United States and there are people in every single one of the 48 States who hold policies in your insurance companies. It makes me very sad to know, in view of history and present facts, that there are many executives of insurance companies who are trying to spread fear—not just here in Hartford, not just in Connecticut, but among the policyholders in every part of the union.

Like That With the Banks

Let me go back: In 1932, the insurance companies—and I have been in the surety business, so I know—if you had tried to liquidate them for the benefit of the policyholders, they would have come out in the red. Why? Because the assets which they carried on the farms and other properties throughout this country were down at values so low that they could not have got their money back. What did we do? You know!

It was just like that with the banks. The banks folded up in this country before I took office. Where are they today?

Therefore I say that on the part of these men who are trying to instill fear in the policyholders throughout the United States, it is the most dastardly and the most unpatriotic action of any Americans I know of.

Defend Only Against Attack

Of course, it is only part and parcel of an election or campaign, but you and I know that those things, those false statements, leave scars; and what I am working for is the unity of the Americas, especially the unity of American people in this great program of defense. And I want to take off my hat to the State of Connecticut because of the splendid cooperative effort that all the workers of this State in hundreds and hundreds of factories are making. The result of that effort is to make the United States strong enough in order to defend itself from attack from the outside.

Almost every year that has passed, sometimes every few minutes, some responsibility has fallen on me to avoid entangling alliances or entangling actions that might lead this country into war, I notice that for 7½ years, nearly 8, the United States not only has remained at peace, not only has kept free from any entanglements, but the United States today is at peace and is going to remain at peace.

And so I am glad that we have had this day with a drizzle because it is a great omen of what is going to happen next Tuesday.

of 25,000—many of them straight from insurance offices—loudly cheered.

Through streets lined with uproarious thousands, the President proceeded to the East Hartford plant of the Pratt & Whitney division of the United Aircraft Corp., holder of $160,000,000 in Government contracts for the building of 17,000 airplane engines.

He briefly drove around the enormous plant, stopped for a few minutes to see some engines and propellors placed outside one of the buildings, and was applauded by thousands of workers.

But the greatest reception of the day burst upon him several hours later when he drove out of the old South Station in Boston.

Home-going thousands jammed the narrow downtown streets of the metropolis as the President and his party headed toward the apartment of his youngest son, John, with whom he was to have dinner.

M. I. T. Dissents

But when the President reached his son's home, he was greeted by an enormous sign strung across a Massachusetts Institute of Technology fraternity house next door. It read: "Massachusetts Welcomes Willkie."

Students lined the roof of the building gleefully yelling "We Want Willkie" while others sang "We Want Roosevelt." The fraternity house was also decorated with another sign that bore the legend: "Inspection Tour or Fishing Trip?"

At New Haven, first stop in a pouring rain, and later at Hartford and Worcester, the President re-emphasized his intention to keep the Nation out of war.

Appearing coatless and hatless on the rear platform of his train, he told a New Haven crowd of 6,500 that "all this talk about sending American boys to Europe doesn't conform to the facts of the past or the facts of the future."

With Yale undergraduates noticeably absent, President Roosevelt's audience appeared—judging from placards—to be largely composed of women garment workers.

After slowing down through small Connecticut towns and stopping for a moment at Meriden, home of Senator Francis Maloney, Democratic nominee for reelection, the Presidential train arrived at Hartford. The county containing Hartford gave the President a majority of 103,000 to 63,000 in 1936, but returned a Republican Representative with a 4,000 majority in 1938.

Lewis Disavows Cabinet Ambitions

declined it. If, in the future, it should again be tendered to me I would decline it."

Lewis said that "in addition to all this, Wagner was "mis-informed on many of his facts."

Wagner had declared that Lewis had made "a grave and tragic mistake" in turning away from the Roosevelt Administration, which he supported in 1936.

Lewis said that the Senator "did not deal with a single point at issue."

"As I stated in my address Friday night," he continued, "there is no spokesman in the Democratic Party, or in the Roosevelt Administration, intellectually capable of this task.'"

In an editorial published yesterday in some labor union papers, Lewis continued his criticism of the Administration, saying:

"The New Deal is as dead as a dodo. The Administration has either abandoned outright or sabotaged much of the social legislation placed on the books in its early years. Vast sums are being ladled out in defense contracts without regard to enforcement of laws intended to protect the Nation's workers from exploitation. The National Labor Relations Board has become demoralized and unable to function. The wage-hour law is being undermined by lax enforcement. Public housing for slum dwellers is out the window. Extension of social security and health programs has been scrapped."

Byrnes Foresees Labor Peace

St. Louis, Oct. 30 (AP).—Settlement of the split in labor's ranks as a result of John L. Lewis' promise to resign as head of the C. I. O. if President Roosevelt is reelected was foreseen today by Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina.

He made the assertion during a brief stop here on his Democratic campaign tour of the Middle West.

"Lewis' statement is one of the most heartening of recent political developments," Byrnes told interviewers. "If he resigns, some of the more reasonable C. I. O. leaders, such as Philip Murray and Sidney Hillman, likely would have no difficulty in effecting an agreement with the A. F. L."

Byrnes, who was a guest at the White House Sunday, said the President "feels confident" of reelection."

than 4 per cent in popular votes.

This would bring all such areas within the range of normal expectancy of error in a sampling survey, which in recent elections has averaged 4 per cent.

As the Institute has constantly pointed out in the last five years, sampling surveys are designed to achieve a high degree of accuracy, but not perfect accuracy.

Whether the Willkie trend continues during the rest of this week remains to be seen, after the full effect of President Roosevelt's speeches has had time to sink in. It is entirely possible that the last-minute campaign activities of the Roosevelt forces may switch voters in the pivotal States back to the Democratic side.

At this particular moment, however, the 1940 election has all the elements of the Wilson-Hughes election of 1916—the last close election. Wilson won with 52 per cent of the major party vote, to 48 per cent for Hughes. But this two per cent Democratic majority gave Wilson only 277 electoral votes—just 11 more than necessary to win—while Hughes polled 254.

Norris Hits 'Wild' Willkie Statement

Los Angeles, Oct. 30 (AP).—Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, charged in a speech tonight that Wendell L. Willkie is, by "wild and untrue statements about our national defense, giving encouragement to those who would destroy us."

NORRIS

He said Willkie might be doing this "without intending, perhaps, to do so."

On the other hand, Senator Norris asserted that Willkie "had an hysterical fit" when Congress adopted an amendment "providing for the conscription of property, as well as human life.

"I am wondering why the people do not rise up in horror at the position Mr. Willkie has taken. When he took that position, he was true to his life's work, true to his defense of the foul holding companies in the utility field."

Denying assertions of unpreparedness which he attributed to Willkie, the Senator asked:

"What would we do at the present hour with a larger standing army? The war is being fought mainly in the air and on the sea. Before an invading army could come upon our shores, it would have to overcome our fleet and our Air Corps.

Objector Decides Not to Appeal G.P.O. Suspension

Herbert Leader, Government Printing Office shipping clerk who was suspended when, as a conscientious objector, he refused to wrap draft forms and asked for other work, will not seek reinstatement, friends said yesterday.

The youthful pacifist, it was said, would leave Washington and return to his family's farm in Bennington, Vt., dropping his appeal which was scheduled to be heard by a committee appointed by the Public Printer.

Leader, who lives in Greenbelt, Md., is a member of no organized religious or pacifist group, friends said. He told G. P. O. officials his personal moral beliefs would not permit him "to help build a war machine that will add to bloodshed and killing."

It was said that he registered for the draft, but will seek classification as a conscientious objector opposed to both combatant and noncombatant service.

'Color Line' Charge Brought Against Ickes

The Republican National Committee made public yesterday a statement by Senator Townsend (Republican), of Delaware, accusing Secretary Ickes of discriminating against Negroes in Shenandoah National Park in Virginia.

Townsend charged that Ickes "has failed to act upon protests which have been before him for many months against racially discriminating signs compelling colored citizens of the United States to confine their picnic activities to the remote Lewis Mountain section. . . .

"With national unity the watchword, the colored people feel very deeply that any policy of discrimination by their Government is a distinct injustice."

Willkie Noncommittal on Reports He Would Invite Hull to Stay On, if He Is Elected

Post Staff Writer

Baltimore, Oct. 30.—Wendell Willkie said merely "no comment" tonight on reports that he would invite Secretary of State Cordell Hull to continue at his post in the Cabinet, if he is elected.

HULL

Nor would he discuss Washington dispatches saying Secretary Hull strongly disproved of talk that he might be asked to stay on.

Hull said at his press conference that the reports smacked of politics and he did not countenance them for a moment.

Willkie's aides pointed out that the Republican nominee never has said he would invite Hull to remain. Willkie should NOT be expected, they said, to say whom he would put in his Cabinet before the election.

In a Chicago speech the Republican nominee said he would name the ablest man versed in foreign affairs that he could find, and he has pointedly refrained from criticism of Hull, even when replying to the Secretary's National Press Club speech of last Saturday.

Seabury to Speak On Radio for Willkie

New York, Oct. 30 (AP).—The Associated Willkie Clubs of America announced today that Samuel Seabury, one-time Democratic candidate for Governor of New York, will speak tomorrow night in behalf of Wendell Willkie from 10:30 to 10:45 (N. B. C., State network, WJZ).

SEABURY

Seabury conducted the investigation which led to the resignation of James J. Walker as Mayor of New York City when Franklin D. Roosevelt was Governor.

Roosevelt, Jr., for Willkie As President—of Utility

Minneapolis, Oct. 30 (AP).—Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., drew a capacity audience of 3,000 University of Minnesota students into Coffman Memorial Union to hear him declare "my old man is going to keep us out of war."

"Wilson said that 20 years ago," a student shouted.

"Can you believe Roosevelt or Willkie?" Roosevelt shot back.

Through the roars Roosevelt stood on the platform and smiled.

When he mentioned "in 1933 Hitler came into power," a heckler shouted, "So did Roosevelt."

A chant of "We want Willkie," broke out.

"I want him, too," Roosevelt shouted. "I want him for president of Commonwealth & Southern."

The crowd roared.

Convicts Paint on Prison Roof 'Vote for Willkie'

Michigan City, Ind., Oct. 30 (INS).—Warden Alfred F. Dowd of the Indiana State Prison learned with some surprise today that convicts in the prison were taking a part, necessarily in a limited way, in the current national election campaign.

Aviators who had flown above the penitentiary reported to the warden they had spotted from a considerable altitude a sign in huge white letters reading "Vote for Willkie" on the roof of the prison rug shop.

Warden Dowd, somewhat testily, ordered the sign obliterated forthwith, as he previously had ordered Roosevelt posters from inside the prison. He said "some of the boys" must have made the sign when the rug shop was repainted recently.

Woodring Wants More Advance Notice in Press

Garden City, Kans., Oct. 30 (AP). Harry M. Woodring, former Secretary of War, told a Garden City Democratic rally that the press was challenging its own freedom by failure to print both sides of political issues.

The former Governor charged that Garden City newspapers failed to give his appearance last night due advance notice.

Woodring, addressing a crowd estimated at 200 persons by Garden City reporters, praised the Administration's farm program and said production must be controlled if prices are to be maintained.

Recently-Paved Lane Greets President in Boston

Boston, Oct. 30 (AP).—A newly paved lane giving access to the rear of the Beacon Street apartment of his youngest son, John, was ready when President Roosevelt arrived today.

One Theta Chi fraternity member, who declined use of his name, declared that Beacon Street residents, particularly members of the fraternities, had tried unsuccessfully for six years to have the lane paved. It parallels residential Beacon Street, along the Charles River bank.

Garner Supporter Backs Willkie

Los Angeles, Oct. 30 (AP).—Zach Lamar Cobb, Los Angeles attorney, in his first public political pronouncement since he acted as cochairman of the State Garner-for-President committee in the 1940 primaries, urged in a statement today that California Democrats support Wendell Willkie.

Asserting that President Roosevelt voted for the Republican nominee for President in 1904, Cobb said "it was his right to follow his conscience then, just as it is our right to follow ours now."

Text of Baltimore Speech in Which Willkie Predicts War If New Deal Wins

Renews Attack On Handling Of Defense

President Denounces Aggressors, Then Aids Them, He Declares

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Oct. 30.—Following is the prepared text of an address tonight by Wendell L. Willkie, Republican Presidential nominee:

People of Maryland:

I am deeply touched by this generous welcome. It comes from a people who have contributed much to the free way of life in America.

Here, in the Free State of Maryland, your forefathers gave America two great democratic principles—religious freedom and the right of local self-government.

In 1938 you defended your right to govern yourselves by your own representatives. You rebuked the New Deal with your votes. You rejected an attempt by the third-term candidate to purge one of your United States Senators. And by an overwhelming majority you returned Millard E. Tydings to the Senate. You did well, not only to rebuke the presumption of the purge, but to assure yourselves a good Senator.

Once again you are called on to rebuke the New Deal and reject its attempt to force candidates on you.

You will repudiate its attempt to pervert our free institutions and take us down the road of complete state domination.

Must Preserve Democracy

With your ballots you will reaffirm the common law of the United States: No man shall serve three consecutive terms as President.

The world across the oceans is in flames. New wars, and formidable alliances of force against democracy are the order of the day. Freedom abroad has fallen before the onslaught of the aggressors. Only on the small island of Britain does it still hold out.

We in America are left almost alone. Ours is the duty to hold fast the great traditions of democracy.

Our problem is to protect those traditions and those rights. Our problem is to preserve free enterprise. Unless we do so, our democracy will die.

We can protect our traditions and our rights by asserting them, and by practicing them.

We can preserve free enterprise by making America strong.

The third-term candidate has suggested recently that the third-term candidate is the only man who can protect America.

We reject the fatal doctrine of indispensability.

One-man rule always leads to the road to war.

The third-term candidate and those who are associated with him have much to say about his foresight. He says he saw the crush of the present crisis far ahead.

Now, of course if this is true, the reason for it is that the President makes use of our State Department. That is not a political, but a permanent organization. It consists in trained experts. To them information comes in a constant stream from an equally trained permanent foreign service located in our embassies, ministers and consulates abroad. The third-term candidate has no monopoly on this information. It is always available to any President.

Charges Warnings Disregarded

It is the people's information. It is the people's property. But, of course, the mere possession of information does not guarantee good judgment in its use.

And by the third-term candidate's own record, we know that during the last many years he disregarded the repeated warnings of his own diplomatic and military experts. Yet, from 1933 until 1939, he made no adequate move toward giving the United States modernized defense.

In this threatening year of 1940, in January, he requested an increase in the defense budget of only $350,000,000 dollars. He said that, despite contrary expert opinion, that amount was sufficient.

But a few months after he expressed that opinion, he was forced to ask Congress for $1,500,000,000 more. After that, he then had to go back to Congress four times. In this year of 1940, Congress increased the defense budget by $10,000,000,000—including contract authorizations. That is 40 times more than the increase the President requested after rejecting expert information he had received.

So much for the doctrine of the indispensably informed man. He either does not act at all on the information, or he disregards it.

Our economic system has been in a state of depression during his entire New Deal Administration. We shall have approximately 9,000,000 unemployed. His only defense has been a boast about some recent employment in armament work.

Talks of Protection

Will you keep an Administration whose only cure for unemployment is the manufacture of armament, which its candidate himself has called a house of cards?

Away with them. Away with them.

I want to talk to you tonight about the protection of America—protection in a violent and war-torn world.

The duty of the President is to protect the interests of the United States. These interests come first. All of my policies will start with this question: What is best for the United States?

In protecting America, the maintenance of peace in the Western Hemisphere will be my objective. The President must be dedicated to the objective of peace in our part of the world.

Aid to Britain to the limits of prudence for our own safety is essential to that objective.

I have given you my pledge many times over: I will work for peace. We are against sending our boys into any war other than the defense of our country.

The third-term candidate has also pledged himself to peace. Some nights ago he said—and I quote—"I repeat again that I stand on the platform of our party: That we will not participate in foreign wars, and we will not send our Army, naval or airforce to fight in foreign lands outside of the Americas except in case of attack."

That is his pledge.

And now, let me read you something more he said. I quote: "I reaffirmed my attitude on this question. The thing has been said, therefore, in plain English, three times in my speeches. It is stated without qualification in the platform and I have announced my unqualified acceptance of that platform.

"So much for that misrepresentation."

That's what he said.

Money Pledge Violated

This second paragraph I just quoted from the third-term candidate is a strong pledge. It is just as strong as the first pledge. They both pledge him to Democratic platform planks. But the second one was not made about peace. It was made in 1932 about sound money.

And in April, 1933, five months after the third-term candidate had pledged himself to sound money with these strong words, he abandoned sound money, devalued the dollar. And he still retains in his own hands power to devalue it further.

I ask you whether his pledge for peace is going to last any longer than his pledge for sound money.

On the basis of his past performance with pledges to the people, why shouldn't we expect to be at war by April, 1941, if he is elected?

That is the first requirement for the protection of America—a pledge to work for peace, and good faith in that pledge and another requirement has to do with our relationship with other nations. This is the field of diplomacy.

A Nation cannot have an effective diplomacy unless it is a strong and effective Nation. But however strong we are, our diplomacy should be circumspect, wise and consistent. During the last eight years, the third-term candidate has made reckless flights into the field of diplomacy. These flights were made entirely on his own initiative. And they have contributed to the confusion of the world.

That 'Dagger-in-the-Back' Speech

Statements of the third-term candidate made in 1939 led British observers to publish opinions that the United States would participate in a European war. These statements of the third-term candidate were probably made with good motivies. But they had that misleading effect.

The interests of the United States would have been better served if the third-term candidate had been outspokenly for peace and nonparticipation at that time—instead of waiting to pledge it in an election.

Even as late as June 10, 1940, he startled the world. He declared of Italy that the hand that held the dagger "has struck it into the back of its neighbor." In the capitals of Europe this bit of oratory was not taken as a move to keep the United States at peace.

On October 5, 1937, the third-term candidate called for the quarantine of aggressors. But his policy with regard to aggressors has really tended to strengthen rather than to quarantine them.

For instance, we have consistently proclaimed our sympathy for China. But at the same time we were exporting millions of dollars worth of scrap iron and high-proof aviation gasoline to Japan, which was making war on China.

We have consistently expressed our sympathy for Britain—and the need for aid to Britain. Yet just a few weeks ago we released a shipment of $7,000,000 worth of machine tools to Russia, the ally of Germany.

We Are Aiding the Aggressors

Thus we are helping those nations which the third-term candidate says should be quarantined.

That is no way to protect ourselves.

As President I will not help to mechanized the Red army so that it can carry out its purposes. We shall feel well content to mechanize the Army of the United States.

Appeasement is the surest way to war. No American would stand for appeasement. Nor shall we.

But to avoid it, we must be prepared to defend ourselves. Under the New Deal we have not become prepared.

And it will take a minimum of 18 months to equip us with even an inadequate protection.

Under the New Deal it would probably take much longer than that. Have you ever heard of a New Deal building project that was finished on schedule?

We pledge you to devote all our energy and our experience to building you the Army and Navy that we so desperately need.

We pledge you a defense that will mobilize the energies of America swiftly and confidently.

With regard to the defense program, there are a number of things that need to be done at once.

List Six Defense Essentials

First, we must make certain that there is no delay in providing housing for our new soldiers.

Second, we must obtain supplies of raw materials which are not now produced in the United States—rubber, tin and other things essential to national defense.

Third, we must make defense weapons which we need and make them faster and in larger quantities.

Fourth, we must hasten decision on the types of defense arms that we want industry to build. It is far better to have a large number of good and serviceable defense weapons on hand than it is to have a few dream ones on order.

Fifth, we would centralize responsibility. We would take to heart the lessons of the World War which showed that high speed production of defense weapons can never be obtained if able industrialists are used only in an advisory capacity. That was tried in the World War and it failed. Yet it is being tried again today. We would appoint a chairman and give him and his associates authority—and hold them responsible. If he did not get results—if tanks and planes and guns did not begin rolling off the assembly line—he would go, and we would appoint someone else.

Sixth, we must devote Congressional defense appropriations to defense purposes, instead of boondoggling them.

For instance, we must never permit the condition which existed in 1937 to 1939, whereby only 3 per cent of the Army appropriations was spent for training. This is outrageous. The Army should train as an Army, just as a Navy trains as a fleet.

Production Must Increase

Here, then, are three basic elements in the protection of America: Good faith in the pursuit of peace for this hemisphere, a wise and consistent diplomacy, and a strong military and naval defense force.

Yet there is one requirement underlying these requirements, which is more important than any other. This is the requirement that we here in America shall live and prosper, that we shall trade with one another, and do business with one another, and that we shall continue the extraordinary progress in the arts of production that characterized our history for 150 years. The entire purpose of armament and diplomacy is to serve that fundamental requirement.

We cannot hope to sustain the enormous defense program that now faces us, we cannot hope to bear the burden of that debt and of taxes, unless we have production enough to support them.

Production, which has been denied us, is essential not only to assure us peace and the fruits of peace, but to assure us our freedom, both now and hereafter.

Let's look ahead.

Let's suppose that the European war has ended. What kind of a world will we face then?

Regardless of which side is victorious, we will face a world of economic chaos. Europe will be in the throes of a severe deflation. Millions of men demobilized from the armies will be seeking work. The European countries will be trying to adjust their industries to a peacetime basis after the great effort of wartime production.

Postwar Problems

In a world faced by these economic problems, we will face our own grave problems. We will be confronted with the continued task of finding job opportunities for our people, of bringing about increased business enterprise, of achieving parity income for the farmer.

These are the very problems which the New Dealers have failed to solve in the last eight years, and which they are wholly untrained to solve. Is there any reason to suppose that they will be any better able to solve them in the still more difficult conditions which will exist after the war?

Besides those problems, we will have, in addition, the postwar problems. We will have built up a great armaments industry in our national defense effort. We will have to readjust ourselves to the job of beating the swords back into plowshares.

What kind of an Administration would be best for America in those troubled years ahead? Is it the kind of Administration we have had for the past eight years? Is it an Administration which with every opportunity has consistently failed to solve our present economic problems? Is it the kind of Administration that has persistently failed to unite our people; the kind of Administration that has fostered class antagonism, fear and distrust?

In short, is it the New Deal that we want to guide us through those critical years ahead?

Nation's Future Need

Or do we want an Administration that believes in the future of this county—an Administration that knows how to stimulate American enterprise—an Administration that knows what makes a job and is determined to provide all of our people with the opportunity to work?

We must not—we dare not—settle the issue of this election on the basis of the probable European developments within the next few months.

We must have more foresight than that.

We must settle this election on the basis of the future of America.

We dare not let the pessimists and the defeatists determine that future. The men who know how to work and how to produce must determine the future of America.

and the attempted 1938 Maryland "purge."

Charges Recklessness

At the outset, Willkie recalled he had invited President Roosevelt to share the Fifth Regiment Armory platform with him. He said that offer was rejected because it was a public invitation and not addressed like an invitation "to a family dinner party."

Willkie said he invited the President publicly "because I thought this was public business, not family business." He said he wanted to debate with the President, "but you can't join debate with one man on the platform."

Charging "reckless" action in diplomacy, he mentioned the President's "dagger in the back" speech, his "quarantine" speech, and his release of $70,000,000 of machine tools to Russia.

Willkie pledged that if elected, he would not "help to mechanize the Red army."

At Cumberland, his first Maryland speech of the campaign, he voiced "hope" that the President keeps his 1940 promises "better than he did his pledges of 1932."

"Because if he doesn't," shouted a hoarser but more aggressive Willkie, "some of these Maryland boys who were called today in the draft will certainly be loaded on transports."

Walter Johnson His Hero

Here Walter Johnson, "the Big Train," met the Willkie two-diesel-engined special. The former big league pitcher, now throwing his fastest for Maryland's Sixth District Congressional seat, presented Willkie to the crowd of 10,000.

Willkie urged Johnson's election to Congress as "a symbol to the youth of the country that the clean sportsmanship he represents is recognized by the American electorate." He called Johnson his "boy hero" and said today "he still is."

Also on the platform was former Gov. Harry Nice, Republican candidate for the United States Senate.

Later at Martinsburg, W. Va., Willkie promised "to look after your foreign affairs if you elect me President, but I also promise to cast an occasional glance back at America." This, he charged, the President has failed to do.

"We're winning," he told more that 8,000 who stood beside the track here. He mentioned Newton D. Baker, Wilson's Secretary of War, a Martinsburg native, as "one of the finest friends of my life." Baker's widow is supporting Willkie

Calls Envoys "Hirelings"

All day, with a new vigor in his speeches, his husky voice had been shouting: "We're going to win; help us, please help us!" to railway, mine and pottery workers across rock-studded West Irginia.

He flung taunt at the President: quoted Roosevelt's 1932 speeches a the "text of my sermon, and bitterly assailed Ambassador Kennedy and Ambassador Bullitt for "leaving their posts to support Roosevelt.

At Clarksburg, W. a., he said the Ambassadors to England and France "are back here making cheap partisan speeches like any other political hirelings.

At Grafton, W. Va., he said the third-term course is leading to inflation, chaos and bankruptcy, and "the first thing that happens in a country in economic collapse is that labor unions are abolished" and social security is ended. "Then comes a dictator," he added.

Hits Messianic Complex

At Keyser, W. Va., the north branch of the Potomac rippling alongside the track, he said men "who begin to get dictatorial complexes, Messianic ideas that they are the one man who can lead the people, always take the people down the road to war."

At some stops he declared that "the issues of this campaign are not entirely across the seas" and asked by what "black magic this one man understands foreign affairs better than anyone else."

In both West Virginia, where Republicans are counting on John L. Lewis' mine worker support, and in Maryland, where Willkie can't win without Democratic support, he addressed his speeches to "Republicans, Democrats and Independents."

Willkie strategists today tentatively decided against an eleventh hour return trip to Philadelphia. They insisted they will win in Pennsylvania without it, and decided to devote all of Thursday and part of Friday to New Jersey instead. Willkie will rest after that until his Saturday night Madison Square Garden broadcast to the Nation.

Taber Cites G. O. P. Defense Record

Representative Taber of New York, ranking Republican on the House Appropriations Committee, said in a statement yesterday the members of his party had "supported unanimously every bill to provide funds for the Army or the Navy, wether they were large or small, since the first of last May" and had opposed only measures "like the neutrality bill, which vested discretion in the President."

TABER

He was replying to charges by Governor Lehman, of New York, that if the governor had controlled Congress all defense bills would have been sabotaged.

He said that "At no time during those past eight years has President Roosevelt thought enough of the recommendations of the Army leaders to follow them. A group of Republicans upon that committee with some of the Democrats have had to frame the policy whenever an advance has been made toward national defense all those eight years.

We appreciate the handicap that the country has been under in developing our national defense program by not having had since March 4, 1933, either a Secretary of War or a Secretary of the Navy in control of the operations of either department."

Jackson Derides 'Gestapo' Charge

Attorney General Jackson yesterday termed "political humbug and an obvious political stunt" a comment by Representative Bruce Barton (Republican), of New York, on the handling of a letter sent to President Roosevelt by Mrs. William H. Fain, of Greenwich, Conn.

BARTON

In her letter, Mrs. Fain said that the "tone" of two speeches by Mr. Roosevelt "seems to me calculated to build up a psychosis which may drive us into a war in which we could be of little help to Europe, but in which we might lose our own liberty as well as the lives of our youth."

Barton said in a radio address in New York Tuesday night that when Mrs. Fain asked for a copy of the letter to refresh her memory of what she had written she received a photostatic copy from the Justice Department bearing a stamp which said "criminal division."

Barton, a candidate for the Senate, commented that the handling of the letter was "something to make our ancestors turn over in their graves."

Calling Barton's assertion a "painfully desperate effort" to brand the department as a "Gestapo," Jackson said in a statement that "Barton has been in Washington long enough to know that there is nothing sinister in the fact that the White House, which receives thousands of letters from all parts of the country, frequently relies on the various departments to aid in handling the volume of its correspondence.

"The letter from Mrs. Fain happened to be referred to the Department of Justice for acknowledgement and for no other reason. It was a perfectly proper letter and acknowledgement was made by the criminal division simply because that division has a correspondence section to handle complaints and information received from the public.

"There is no attempt to intimidate anyone and nobody is being investigated. Mr. Barton . . . might devote his time to more important matters than Halloween pranks."

Willkie Democrats Revoke Guffey Support in Pa.

Philadelphia, Oct. 30 (AP).—Delegates representing Philadelphia and nine other counties in the Eastern Pennsylvania division of Democrats-for-Willkie organization withdrew today their support of United States Senator Joseph F. Guffey, Democratic candidate for re-election.

At a meeting here the group amended unanimously its original platform by eliminating a clause to "support now and hereafter all Democratic candidates for all other offices" except President. The amendment also revoked the organization's support of Henry A. Wallace, Democratic Vice Presidential nominee.

The amendment was sponsored by Henry I. Fox, Montgomery County, as a substitute for one proposed by Mrs. Jean Foulke, former Democratic State committeewoman from Chester County, who said:

"Guffey has been a malign influence, a corruption of our public morals."

Willkie 'Plays Axis Game,' Flynn Says

New York, Oct. 30 (AP).—Edward J. Flynn, Democratic National chairman, asserted today that "every Fascist and Nazi organization in the country is for Wendell Willkie" and that the Republican Presidential candidate is "playing the game of the Axis."

FLYNN

Flynn, at his press conference, said that Willkie was "giving comfort to the Axis powers" by "belittling the Nation's defenses" and by "causing a degree of fear in South American nations that we are not as well prepared as we should be."

The chairman's remarks were made when he was asked to explain a section of his prepared statement that "Herr Hitler and the Axis generally are doing what they can do to accomplish the defeat of President Roosevelt and doubtless have ordered their representatives in this country how to proceed."

Asked what these instructions of procedure were, Flynn said "they (the Axis powers) want their representatives to vote for Willkie."

"Nobody, of course, has accused the Republican candidate of being a Communist, a Fascist, or otherwise cast any doubt on his Americanism," Flynn said, "but the eagerness of his campaign managers to accept support from any source, however tainted, is a phenomena of this campaign."

Willkie Victory Forecast by Hanes

New York, Oct. 30.—Wendell L. Willkie cannot lose the election unless the sharp shift to him that has developed in the last few days is unexpectedly checked before next Tuesday, John W. Hanes, former Undersecretary of the Treasury in the Roosevelt Administration, said today.

There has been an estimated defection of about 22 per cent of registered Democrats to Mr. Willkie and this change should be sufficient to carry the 17 "northern tier" States between Maine and Iowa, Hanes, an executive member of the Democrats-for-Willkie told a luncheon meeting of Willkie supporters.

Hanes said that his group had sent out 1,200,000 Willkie pledge cards to registered Democrats throughout the United States and found this uniform 22 per cent shift.

'Change Horses,' Urges Senator Nye

Kewanee, Ill., Oct. 30.—Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, said tonight that "when you have leaders and horses that don't know how, or have not the will, to keep out of the middle of dangerous streams . . . it is high time that we changed leaders and changed horses."

NYE

"There is desperate need for change," Nye said. "There is desperate call upon the American people to break this will on the part of a few to continue in control in government. Men of the Willkie and McNary type, solid, sane, unselfish, great lovers of the truest type of democracy, great lovers of the American way, lend themselves as especially desirable for leadership at this time."

Regarding the Administration's expenditure, he said:

"Let's try to remember that anyone who claims unto himself all credit for the meeting of the needs of the American people, has used, not his own pocket in meeting that need, but the pocket of Uncle Sam, and that means all of us."

Roosevelt Failed Race, Says Louis

St. Louis, Oct. 30 (AP).—Joe Louis, heavyweight boxing champion, addressing a colored mass meeting tonight, criticized President Roosevelt for failing to keep his promise to eliminate persecution of colored people in the South and urged members of his race to vote for Wendell Willkie "because he will do what the President has failed to accomplish."

"Roosevelt had two terms to do what he could do, but didn't give us an antilynching law," he said.

"I am just Joe Louis. I am a fighter, not a politician. This country has been good to me, has given me everything I have, and I want it to be good to you and give you everything you need.

"I am for Willkie because I think he will help my people. I figure my people ought to be for him, too."

John Roxborough, manager of the champion, announced during the visit here that Louis would introduce Willkie at a colored rally in New York's Harlem election eve.

Tunney Criticises Kennedy Partisanship

St. Louis, Oct. 30 (INS).—Former Heavyweight Champion Gene Tunney, in St. Louis on his way to Oklahoma City, today criticized the speech made last night by Joseph P. Kennedy, American Ambassador to Great Britain, in behalf of President Roosevelt's candidacy.

"As a taxpayer," Tunney said, "I question the right of an Ambassador to come home to make a purely partisan speech.

"It is good that we have career men in London to man the post in the Court of St. James's.

Dedication today of the $4,000,000 plant of the National Institute of Health will mark a new improvement in a service with an admirable record. This research branch of the United States Public Health Service had its beginning in 1887 when a director and two assistants established headquarters in a single room on Staten Island. Today the staff numbers more than 700.

Six buildings have been erected on 86 acres in Bethesda given by Mrs. Luke I. Wilson and her late husband. In these plants 600 scientists and technicians will assemble to carry on their work.

Many of the experts, already gathered in from scattered offices and laboratories, are finding themselves able for the first time to avoid duplication of effort and to cooperate fully in problems which overlap more than one field. Facilities are at hand for research in industrial hygiene, public health methods, cancer, infectious diseases, biology, pharmacology and chemistry.

Through the years the institute has not been without its heroes, both sung and unsung. Among the more recent additions to this list is the late Dr. Joseph Goldberger, who was sent out to discover the cause of pellagra. He found not only the cause, but also a cure. To Dr. Edward Francis, another member, is credited the discovery that rabbits and squirrels infect human beings with tularemia. Only this year 15 of the institute's research workers, studying an outbreak of Australian "Q" fever, caught the disease themselves. One of them died.

To these men, their associates and successors, now has been given the world's largest and best-equipped plant for the study of disease. But also upon them has descended the greatest responsibility yet borne by any group of medical research workers. For the laboratories of Europe and Asia, like all other institutions pursuing peacetime objectives, have had their work interrupted. Fortunately, there is every reason to believe that the Institute of Health will continue the march of progress in medical science despite these handicaps abroad.

Japan To Sit It Out

Remote as she is from the Balkan peninsula, Japan has more than a purely academic interest in the war which has broken out between Italy and Greece.

Since September 27 of this year Japan has been Italy's ally. She is thus committed by the terms of the alliance to go to Italy's support "with all political, economic and military means" in the event the latter "is attacked by a power at present not involved in the European war or in the Chinese-Japanese conflict."

Of course, it was not Greece which attacked Italy but Italy which attacked Greece. But Japan cannot officially use that fact as a pretext to refrain from helping Italy, without impugning the veracity of the Rome government. For, according to Italy, it was the belligerent Greeks who were the aggressors against the peace-loving Fascists. Logically, therefore, Japan would appear to be bound to declare war on Greece and Great Britain and rush all possible assistance to the Axis.

Reports from Tokyo suggest, however, that Japan does not consider herself involved in the Balkan war, the terms of the Berlin treaty to the contrary notwithstanding. Indeed, there is not even the immediate likelihood of any consultations being held by Japan and the Axis regarding that war. Japan feels that she has a right to interpret the obligations of the alliance as she sees fit and solely in accordance with her own interests.

This emphasizes the belief widely voiced in this country that the tripartite agreement among the aggressor states was first and foremost a blackmailing device. The purpose was to discourage the United States from giving further aid to Great Britain and China by threatening this Nation with war. Only secondarily was the pact a pooling of the resources of Japan, Germany and Italy against any and all nations standing in the way of each of them. Nor could it be otherwise at a time when the Axis has its hands full in Europe and Japan has her hands full in Asia.

Only in the event of a collapse of British and Chinese resistance could the German-Italian-Japanese combination become really menacing to the United States. The importance of continued and increasing aid to Great Britain and China, to forestall an Axis-Japanese victory as long as possible and perhaps prevent it altogether, is thus again underlined.

Mr. Kennedy's Advice

Ambassador Kennedy has come back from London in a very somber mood. That, of course, is not surprising. He has seen a good deal of modern aerial warfare and he has naturally been impressed with its horrors and destructiveness. His first thought is quite properly that the United States should avoid participation in the conflict that has brought so much sorrow and hardship to Europe.

Perhaps there is nothing new in the advice which Ambassador Kennedy has to offer. Nevertheless, his close contact with the war gives special point to the suggestions and warnings which he broadcast on Tuesday night. He rightly sees that all diplomacy is subordinate to armed force in this blitzkrieg era and that only by acquiring a powerful military force can the United States hope to retain its peace and freedom.

In offering a guideline to American foreign policy Mr. Kennedy said: "We can be strong, unprovocative, resolute, fair with the democracies, hostile to the aggressors and sympathetic with the oppressed without bringing to our shores that miserable thing that does nothing but destroy—war." Every American will hope that this one note of optimism in his address is well founded. It has to be remembered, however, that it is not always possible for a nation to choose whether or not it will go to war. That choice is open only to those countries that are so strong as to be in no danger of attack.

Mr. Kennedy was naturally eager to refute unfair charges that the Administration has entered into secret commitments which might lead this country into the European conflict. For the most part his adddress was free from partisanship. While he indorsed President Roosevelt's candidacy for a third term, he also frankly recognized the fact that both candidates favor speedy rearmament, avoidance of war and continuation of aid to Great Britain. Considering the fact that Mr. Kennedy is an official within the Roosevelt Administration, his address on the eve of the Presidential election was remarkable for its objectivity.

Only one objection was raised indirectly against Wendell Willkie. "We do not have time to train a green hand," the Ambassador said, "even though he comes to his task full of good-will and general capacity . . ." It is difficult to overlook the incompatibility of this statement with his previous declaration that this is a "war of industries."

If the first responsibility of the United States is to build up its own defenses and furnish supplies to friendly victims of aggression, the greatest emphasis must be placed upon stimulation of our industrial machine. Experience in this field, where Mr. Willkie is certainly not a green hand, may well count for as much as experience in actual direction of the affairs of government.

Taste For The Dark

There is one thing more to be said about the London air raids—they seem to have put an end to grumbling by Londoners over the discomforts and hazards of the blackout. Not very long ago the police and the A. R. P. wasted a good deal of time, breath and patience admonishing householders who had forgotten to put opaque coverings over their window apertures and motorists who were careless about their headlights. Nobody, with the possible exception of the amorous, had a good word to say for the blackout.

Even the government never pretended that enforced darkness was anything better than a necessary nuisance. But now officials have no need to apologize for blackout ordinances. They are rigidly enforced by the populace itself, and the person who is so incautious as to permit a ray of light to escape into the street, instantly draws execration upon his head.

Here, perhaps, is another illustration of how rapidly habits and even the psychology of a people can be altered under the stress of total war. Over and above the inconveniences, much of the Londoner's earlier distaste for the blackout was no doubt traceable to an atavistic dread of the dark, such as is often observable in young children. For primitive man, darkness and danger were one. And in nearly all literatures we find light and darkness to be metaphors, respectively, for good and evil, or for hope and despair.

But now, for the inhabitants of cities subject to frequent bombardments, darkness has acquired protective associations something like those the campfire has for the traveler in wild places. Thus it might be interesting to speculate upon the ultimate social and psychological effects of these associations should the aerial war go on for years.

A great proportion of the dwellers in our brilliantly-lighted twentieth-century cities go through their lives without ever learning the meaning of darkness, that is to say how dark the dark can be. No doubt this overstimulation of our optic nerves has had something to do with what has been called modern temper.

And yet the taste for darkness (in moderate doses) can be acquired no less than the taste for solitude. Perhaps no one can truly feel the splendor of the morning unless he has felt the full heaviness of night. At any rate, no really good poem about the dawn seems to have been written since the invention of the electric light.

The Big Story

If there can be such a thing as a three-horned dilemma, that is what the news editors had to wrestle with Tuesday night and yesterday morning. Three not unrelated stories of tremendous and palpable importance were competing for paramount attention. These were: (1) The further extension of the war into the Balkans. (2) The gathering climax of what is probably the most fateful and most bitterly contested Presidential race since 1860. (3) The selection of numbers for the first peacetime conscription in American history.

Perhaps to some extent the fate of civilization is again being written with fire and blood in that part of the world where it was written more than 2,400 years ago. Again it may be that the whole destiny of the United States is involved in the shifting and powerful psychological currents which will determine the outcome of the election. Compared to either of these developments, the fixing of priorities in the draft may seem of relatively slight importance a few decades hence.

In most newspapers, however, it was the draft lottery that claimed first honors. The reason is not difficult to find.

It is well known that news editors and historians apply very different standards in judging the significance of events. The draft numbers were given first place yesterday because they held the greater interest for the largest number of readers. For the young man of military age, for his wife and his parents, the battles in Greece and the charges and countercharges of Presidential candidates could wait until they had ascertained whether or not the laws of chance had decreed he should be separated from his home and the normal orbit of his life. And this being so, who can doubt that the conclusion of the news editors was the only one possible?

Fall Openings

A recent dispatch from Paris indicates that the fall fashion openings took place as usual. The only major changes were in the audiences that attended and, of course, in the clothes. The former were composed, in some measure, of German officers' wives. The number of buyers had diminished noticeably.

It must be assumed that either the present occupants of Paris or the designers themselves decided to put on this brave spectacle of business as usual. Rich materials, furs and low-cut formal evening gowns were among the unexpected items in the collections this year. Such crowds attended the salon openings that Field Marshal Hermann Goering, who was accompanied by his staff, decided to return and view the collection again some other day, when presumably the officer and his aides might have a private showing of the lovely models.

One of the concessions to wartime and the lack of gasoline was Lanvin's split skirt for the bicycle, a vehicle now called the "little queen." The accessory instead of being a pocketbook is a saddlebag.

It sounds like a brave show and a beautiful one. But where will these creations be worn and by whom? Perhaps they will attend the field marshal's receptions. And they can always be pawned for their value in vegetables and milk, if there are vegetables and milk.

Not Sabotage

Army intelligence officers and the District fire marshal have promptly undertaken a thorough investigation of the blaze which destroyed a newly-built fourth-floor addition to the Munitions Building yesterday. The fire also did extensive damage to secret codes, records and equipment stored in that structure.

Such an investigation is doubly important at this time. The War Department is now the center of far-ranging activities of vital moment to the United States. Any development, even if wholly accidental, which results in disruption of its routine or destruction of important records handicaps the great national defense effort. So the greatest possible care must be taken to prevent such unfortunate occurrences. And since there is the ever-present menace of sabotage, particular watchfulness on that score is imperative.

It does not appear that Wednesday morning's fire in the Munitions Building was the result of deliberate incendiarism. Secretary Stimson says that the blaze was "unquestionably" caused by a short circuit or a cigarette. Nonetheless, eternal watchfulness is in order. For Secretary Stimson has himself admitted that the dangers of sabotage are greater today than they were during the World War.

If Germany has a secret weapon, as she has been strongly implying for many months, she is doing an excellent job of keeping the nature of it secret.

Drinking And Football

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just read "Dealcoholized Football" by your columnist, H. I. Phillips, in The Post of October 29.

What he says about drinking at football games now may be correct. I hope it is but cannot know for I attend very few games, none in the last two years. What he says about drinking at football games during prohibition days may have been true in some places but as a general blanket indictment it is an unmitigated falsehood.

I attended college four years during the era of prohibition and watched a football game almost every Saturday afternoon during the season. I saw practically every college team in Virginia, as well as some others, in action. There was some drinking at these games, about such as he says prevails now. At none of these games was there such drinking as Mr. Phillips describes.

A Prophecy

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please permit me to offer a tentative advance release on the forthcoming Republican post-mortem:

Mr. Willkie will send the customary telegram, congratulating the winner—on the passing of this way of life, on mounting debts and doles, bogged-down defense programs, too much (or too little) aid to Britain, the death of the two-party system, and American transport ships steaming off to foreign wars.

Dr. Gallup will point out that a shift of only ten points in the popular vote from F. D. R. to Willkie in 37 pivotal States would have made a lot of difference.

Pontifical columnists of the extreme right will interpret a mere Roosevelt plurality of 10,000,000 as a stinging rebuke to the New Deal. They will see in the returns a clear mandate for the appeasement of Garner and the deportation of Corcoran and Cohen.

Heavy thinkers, such as Mark Sullivan, Frank Kent and Arthur Krock, will suffer. They were much too grim through it all. Not so the light-hearted and gentle Mr. Pegler. A fresh manicure and a nice big maple nut sundae will fix him up. He was only spoofing, after all.

The patriotic publishers, undaunted, will lay their plans to stop Roosevelt in 1944.

They won't.

Domestic Discussion

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Referring to the letter appearing October 26, entitled "If She Could Vote," it is very well written, but written without thought of why our defenses are now in the low state in which they are. Who signed all the naval treaties? Who scrapped all our battleships? Who refused to appropriate adequate sums for national defense? You can't blame that on the Democratic Administration.

It all happened during the Republican (ersatz) prosperity, during the Harding, Coolidge and Hoover administrations. And it was quite all right when Republicans were trying to put Cal Coolidge up for a third term. Willkie can find nothing wrong with the Roosevelt Administration, except the third term issue.

He admits in his speeches that he would change little of the New Deal gains. In other words, he says he will do the same as Roosevelt, but he'll do it better.

P. S.—"She" is my wife, and, secretly, I'm glad she can't vote for Willkie.

"Give Willkie A Chance"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been reading the letters on the editorial page of your paper very carefully since the "mud slinging" campaign between Roosevelt and Willkie started.

It is true that today more people have jobs and are making more money than they did eight years ago, but just where has this money come from? I am not a pessimistic sort of person, but it seems to me that a day is coming when we will have to meet this national debt that we are making.

It is true that Willkie has offered us many things if he is elected and, if we look back on some of Roosevelt's promises, we can easily see that he has failed in many ways. In the past four years there has been little that is outstanding.

Many people in this country are for Roosevelt merely because they are doing much better now than they were in 1932-1933, and therefore they are blind to financial facts of our national Government. I am in favor of giving Willkie a chance to prove his aims.

Politics And Defense

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Roosevelt, the candidate, stooped pretty low in his Philadelphia speech by making political capital out of the national defense program in attempting to take personal credit for the employment created in the last two months by this program. In other words, the Administration is using the $13,000,000,000 appropriated for national defense in the attempt to perpetuate itself in power.

This might have been expected from the way in which the same administration used the $4,000,000,000 blank check for relief etc. granted by Congress shortly before the 1936 election. Judging from these two samples, it may now be predicted that, if Roosevelt is elected, the New Deal will not stop in 1944 at anything less than a $20,000,000,000 program for again perpetuating itself in power, that is, of course, if United States credit lasts that long.

Double Issues

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We turn to your editorial page, hoping to find food for thought, but that amazing article called "Mr. Lewis' Bombshell" was thin soup indeed.

What a sweet magnanimity all of sudden, toward the erstwhile leader of the radical C.I.O. You couldn't be so cynical as to ascribe to him motives rather short of patriotism? At least not right now.

But, what I really resent was that double issue thing against the ambitious Mr. Roosevelt. Allow me to suggest that you haven't imagined anything yet, about double issues in grave times. Not until you picture the election of a leader, without a party, a liberal candidate on a conservative ticket and an inexperienced, obviously confused, hand at the helm. Wait until the extremists who have supped with him begin the pressure at the same time.

Imagine John L. Lewis and the House of Morgan at the same table, then you'll know something about double issues. And, as long as our dictator places himself and his record before the electorate every four years, I'm not worried. This third-term opposition is largely jealousy—just the outs want to get in. I hope this third-term tradition is so badly smashed November 5 you'll never again be able to pick up a piece.

He Has Made Up His Mind

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a Democrat and a Democrat all my life. My father was a Democrat in Michigan before and during the Civil War, when it was a pretty serious business to let it be known that you were a Democrat. His father was a Democrat in Vermont before that. My first vote for a Republican was in 1896. I voted for a Republican candidate for Congress in the Galveston district. The answer to that is I knew the Democrat.

The only other times I remember scratching the ticket was when somebody by the name of Parker was running against Roosevelt. I voted for Debs. Then, after the Kilkenny cat fight in New York in 1924, when the best they could do was ask the House of Morgan to loan them John W. Davis, I voted for La Follette. I am proud of that and am absolutely certain that this country would be vastly better off today if he had been elected.

I am pretty sure I have been until now in the same state of mind that a lot of other people may yet be, so I am asking The Post to help me air my views: I was quite enthusiastic in my support of Roosevelt in 1932—but swallowed my fellow Texan, Garner, with difficulty. My ardor had cooled very little in 1936. But I must confess he has had me guessing a lot since then, and I have had a very serious mental struggle to make up my mind about what to do at this election.

Well, when I saw—or heard—John L. Lewis frantically scrambling into bed with all those people in public life that he hates, such as Mark Sullivan, Herbert Hoover, Westbrook Pegler, Tom Girdler, Al Smith, Mr. Weir of Weirton, Charles E. Coughlin, Hugh Johnson et al., it was such a jolt that it really made me quite dizzy, and when I read Dorothy Thompson's reply in this morning's Post to Mark Sullivan, who had chided her for changing her mind, something snapped in my think tank and I suddenly knew that I would prefer Franklin D. Roosevelt, with all his sins of omission and commission, to another man who in many ways could not possibly do any better and who is not guaranteed to do as well—who might grasp for still more power and centralization of Government and make many blunders in other ways.

I don't like the fake "drafting" for a third term; I don't like the forcible feeding to us of a Vice Presidential candidate; I don't like any part of the Chicago convention. I don't like the acceptance of the help of Hague, Nash-Kelly and Flynn. I didn't like the "Second Louisiana Purchase."

I didn't like the bold and unblushing way in which a man in want—in dire need—of a job all along during the early days of the New Deal was told to show some evidence that he had made the proper financial arrangements with his political leader. But with all due respect to Mr. Willkie—and I do respect him personally—I can feel no assurance that all those things might not be just as bad or worse if he were elected.

After months of very serious consideration I have made up my mind to vote for Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Too Much Comfort

WHENEVER WE GO to New York we stop at a small hotel downtown, a little seedy and threadbare but with its chin up, so to speak, like somebody holding his own despite difficulties. At night it's as quiet as in the country; it's inexpensive; and everybody knows us—Mr. Mac at the desk, Miss Brown at the switchboard, Byron and the other bellboys, who never change and, so, like people who don't change either.

But last time it was different. A gentleman connected with the Sherdorf Plaza invited my husband and me to be his guests there, a privilege that comes to people like us once in a lifetime. We were thrilled and, blaring the news to our stunned friends, we left.

When we arrived, the registration clerk introduced us to the assistant manager, and the clerk on our corridor, as we stepped off the elevator, actually greeted us by name! We proceeded to our suite, where every step brought a new delight—rugs that felt like cushions under your feet, furniture suggesting lovely women and champagne, air conditioning, indirect lighting and——

"Look here!" I exclaimed, noting a free supply of facial tissue flapping out of the bathroom tile. And "where are you"? as my husband neither appeared nor answered. "Where are you"? I yelled, running around in search of him and finding him at last in a closet nearly the size of a room.

"This one is mine," he said, with an implication a shrewish wife might have resented. "And look at this!" of the bathroom that was all his too.

"You make me feel," I said, "as if you never got inside the closet or bathroom at home."

"We're at the Sherdorf Plaza, honey," he reminded me. "We couldn't quarrel at the Sherdorf Plaza, could we?"

The telephone rang. Did I say the telephone? But there were four telephones, two in each room.

"Which one is it?" he asked while I ran around to listen.

"This one," I said "No, that one," bumping into him as we ran around in confusion.

Then we unpacked and, the last item hung up, I made to put out the closet light. But there wasn't anything along the smooth walls to put it out with. We looked up, down, around and at each other.

"How could that be?" I asked. "There must be a way to turn off a light."

"To hell with it!" said my husband, slamming the door, and the light went out.

It seemed a pity to close our eyes on such splendor, but the wearying trip behind us and the full day ahead sent us to bed. Blankets like clouds and—think of it—silk sheets! Smiling with sweet indulgence as imaginary waiters laved and lapped me, I floated off to sleep.

And then the telephone rang—luckily, the one at my bed—shooting a pang of resentment through me as I fumbled to answer.

"This is the clerk on your floor, Mrs. Gilfond," I heard. "Would you like the maid to come in now and fix your beds?"

"Oh, yes, thank you," I said. "I mean, oh, no. Mr. Gilfond and I are already in bed."

The next day, meeting our benefactor for lunch, my husband and I suggested a French restaurant in the neighborhood.

"It doesn't pay to eat out," our benefactor advised us. "I never eat more than a sandwich for lunch anyway and these side-street restaurants are such gyp joints. Besides, you must eat at the place which has given the world so many famous dishes."

So we lunched in the celebrated Draque Room, about which so much has been written, with celebrities pointed out to us while we stared. And the food was so good that my husband, who hates fancy desserts, finished up with a Sherdorf Plaza creation. The bill was $5.85 which made us rejoice at the thought of what it would have been if our benefactor ate more than a sandwich.

After lunch we went to the fair. A young friend generously called for us in his car, a car that would have been overlooked anywhere else but caused a sensation in front of the Sherdorf Plaza. Indeed, the spectacle of livery at the door of that wreck shook even our courage. Coming back we asked our friend to be good enough to drop us a block away.

We reentered our suite and were stopped by the alluring picture before us—a room all in shadow save for the two soft glows on the pillows of the turned back beds. We approached with a smile that went a little wry as we noted our slippers carefully arranged at each bed, mine with a hole in them and my husband's crinkled at the heels.

And this time, not the telephone, but slamming doors kept waking us. We weren't sleeping so well, I guess. I lay there nostalgically thinking of the little hotel downtown where people aren't rich enough to stay up so late.

My husband must have been thinking along similar lines, for next morning he said, "Let's get out of here"!

I looked at him with dismay; he really wasn't thinking of fleeing the Sherdorf Plaza! What would our friends, green with envy, say? But eagerly I began to pack and, with what a close observer might have spotted as relief, we slunk out of the hotel.

And, my, it was good to see Mr. Mac and Miss Brown and Byron and the others, who knew us not for the one moment we registered or stepped off the elevator but the next day and the day after and ever after.

Today And Tomorrow

The National Defense And Labor And Politics

ALTHOUGH ALL are agreed that the production of armaments should be speeded up, although it is certain that production can be speeded up, although there is an obvious practical way to speed up production, the subject is never mentioned by the campaign orators. But once the election is over, this tabooed subject will emerge as the most urgent of the domestic issues before the people.

The problem is how to get quicker deliveries from the plants which now have the defense contracts and how to get quicker results in expanding old plants and in building new ones. The answer is that among all the things it would be desirable to do, the one thing which will certainly produce the greatest and quickest practical results is to increase the number of hours worked per week. For American industry is now working on a shorter schedule of hours per week than is the industry of any other nation. The experience of every other country proves that a 40-hour week can be lengthened, and more goods turned out more quickly, without impairing the health or the efficiency of the workers. This was admitted by all concerned when recently the hours of work in Government arsenals were increased from 40 to 48 hours.

AS A MATTER of fact, labor itself does not regard the short 40-hour week, which is now fixed by law and union agreements, as a measure to prevent men from overworking. No one seriously concerned with the question has ever contended that the rule is meant to protect men from working more than 40 hours; the purpose of the rule is not to limit hours but to increase wages by the payment of a higher hourly rate for overtime. It is important to fix this clearly in mind. For it proves that there is no objection in principle and no objection as a matter of social policy to a longer working week. If the national interest calls for a longer working week to speed up production, there is nothing in the rule which says that a longer working week would be unjust to labor or would impair the health and the efficiency of the workers. What the rule says is that above the fixed minimum labor is entitled to extra compensation.

If it is decided, and it ought promptly to be decided, that for the period of the emergency a longer working week is needed, then the real problem is how this extra production is to be financed. It would be easy enough to appropriate more money to cover any amount of time-and-a-half or double time, and if this were done the weekly pay envelopes would contain a lot more money. But it is plain that if labor started to spend all this money, the time would soon come when the greatly increased demand for consumer's goods would cause the cost of living to rise. Very quickly, then, the higher earnings would buy no more than the present earnings of labor, probably less. Labor, and everyone who has a bank account, an insurance policy, a pension, or a fixed income of any kind would be caught in a vicious spiral of inflation.

THE REAL QUESTION, therefore, is how to lengthen the working week and yet to preserve the rights of labor without cheating labor through a drastic rise in the cost of living. Though there are several ways in which the question can be answered, in the last analysis they all come down to the same thing. The extra pay for the extra work cannot be spent during the period of the emergency. The United States can certainly arm without sacrificing any of the real necessities of life. But it cannot arm rapidly and on a great scale and at the same time rapidly and on a great scale increase the standard of life. Anyone who says this is possible is talking politics and not the truth, and anyone who does in this emergency increase his normal standard of life ought to be very uncomfortable when he thinks of the men who are already at sea with the fleet, the men now in the Army and the air force, the men who will be called to the training camps.

There are several ways in which a longer working week can be had without inflating the cost of living. Labor can agree to suspend for the period of the emergency some part of the extra pay for overtime. Or labor can agree to a graduated emergency tax on excess earnings. Or a plan might be worked out, similar to one suggested by Mr. J. M. Keynes in England, under which labor would agree not to spend now but instead to invest its excess earnings in Government bonds and in securities certified as designed to finance the expansion of necessary industries. Or, the Government can prevent a sudden increase of consumption by rationing the more luxurious forms of consumption. Or, as is most probable and desirable, the problem can be met by applying moderately a mixture of some or all of these methods. The problem of means is soluble provided the end is clearly kept in mind,—namely that during the emergency it is necessary to do more work and not to increase consumption.

THIS GREAT contribution by labor to the national defense is, with the exception only of that of the men in the armed forces, the greatest contribution which can be made by any members of the community. It is an immediate and indispensable contribution to the peace and security of the Nation and to the defense of the embattled democracies. Plainly, this contribution can be made only if there is no shadow of doubt that it is made for the national defense and not for the benefit of any private interest; it can be made only if the rest of the community willingly bear any sacrifices that can be asked of them.

Above all it can be made only if it is done not merely with the consent of union labor but on the initiative of representatives of labor acting as trusted and responsible members of the organization of national defense. It can be done effectively and successfully only if the rank and file of labor trust their leaders and their leaders trust the administration in office.

WE SHALL BE FACE to face with the problem as soon as the election is over. If Mr. Roosevelt is re-elected, the question will be whether the confidence which the great mass of labor have in him can be maintained if he asks for sacrifices from labor. The case of Mr. John L. Lewis indicates the difficulty. If Mr. Willkie is elected, the question will be whether he can quickly gain the confidence which most of labor does not now have in him and his party, or whether he can be helped to gain that confidence by the Democrats. There too the case of Mr. John L. Lewis indicates the difficulty.

For the position of Mr. Lewis is that he will resign from the C. I. O. if Mr. Roosevelt is re-elected, but that if Mr. Willkie is elected he will remain and will expect to be regarded as the recognized leader of the American labor movement. Thus Mr. Lewis has staked his future as a labor leader upon the outcome of the election, and has identified the political contest between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Willkie with the old contest inside organized labor. This is no service to Mr. Willkie and it is a grave disservice to the nation. For it means that the remarkable unity which labor has achieved under the defense program is in danger of being destroyed no matter how the election goes: either Mr. Lewis becomes an insurgent and disruptive force outside the labor movement or he becomes a dictatorial and disruptive force within it.

THIS IS A VERY serious prospect at a time when the only way to arm the Nation more quickly is to enlist the full cooperation of labor.

Communist Tolerance

THE DEMOCRATIC National Committee has been trying to expunge the record of President Roosevelt's tolerance of Communists and their activities by citing the fact that, in his second administration, Earl Browder was convicted of violating the passport law. I think it was unwise of the boys to do this, but now that they have opened the door let us see what the wind blows in.

The truth is that the evidence against Browder was turned up by the Dies Committee, which had persisted in its work despite acts of political sabotage by President Roosevelt himself, by Mrs. Roosevelt and the New Deal's Washington newspaper claque. Mr. Roosevelt took it upon himself to attempt to discredit this agency of Congress when its revelations embarrassed some of his political supporters, and Mrs. Roosevelt, with corny political ostentation, showed up at the sessions of the committee at a time when the American Youth Congress was under inquiry and sat there knitting, perhaps a red stitch now and again, to demonstrate publicly her sympathy with an organization whose Muscovite character was being disclosed day by day.

MRS. ROOSEVELT also invited the young things to lunch at the White House, and her entire conduct obviously was intended to rebuke the Dies Committee for daring to hear evidence that her favorite youth movement was a Communist Trojan horse—or, let us say, foal.

Much evidence of Communist domination was revealed, and J. B. Matthews, the backslid bolo who was both witness and investigator for the committee, wrote, out of his own long and intimate experience as a fellow-traveler, that the Young Communist League, in concert with left-wing Socialists, captured the congress in its infancy.

As to the character of the Young Communist League, the dominant influence in the Youth Congress, Ben Gitlow, another blackslider who formerly was the head man of the Communist movement in the United States, wrote in his book, "I Confess:" "If a young girl insisted on maintaining her chastity she was frowned upon as a bourgeois. Many of the young Communists considered the giving up of one's chastity as a mark of distinction. The orgies and debaucheries among the youth were spoken about in whispers, never seriously discussed and considered. Many of them turned out to be really tragic figures—intellectually infantile; others, cynically worldly and senile."

THESE REMINDERS will be promptly denounced as a personalized smear of Mr. Roosevelt, whom the Democratic National Committee now openly compares with Abe Lincoln, but the fact is, nevertheless, that the Fauntleroy railsplitter, as Mr. Ickes might call him if he were vituperating on this side of the argument, actually did try to kill off the Dies Committee when its revelations were going against the Communists.

Mrs. Roosevelt's part in the case also is a matter of recent memory, and Representative Dies once openly protested that individuals in the New Deal press delegation not only distorted descriptions and accounts of the hearings but pursed their lips and blew loud, lewd notes at witnesses as they gave evidence against various cells, fractions and individuals.

Not only that but for years, or approximately until the time that Stalin openly joined Hitler against civilization, the sympathy of this Administration was distinctly with Communists and others who denounced and damned the capitalistic, or American, system of economy, and government dictatorship, as such, was not opposed.

Only the Fascist and Nazi dictatorships were condemned, and those who had the fortitude to insist that there was no important difference between Stalin, on one hand, and Hitler, on the other, caught hell from the left. The Administration did not openly take part in this phase of the play, but those who did berate the persons who could see no difference were pals and house pets of the Administration.

AND MRS. ROOSEVELT, Ickes and Robert Jackson evidenced a taunting and provocative preference for organizations which were either openly communistic or known to be dominated by Moscow, such as the Lawyers' Guild, the Workers' Alliance, the Newspaper Guild and the League for Peace and Democracy—and, of course, the Youth Congress.

The individual himself apparently is unimportant, but it has been interesting to observe the dogged resourcefulness of the Administration in finding job after job, all these years, for Paul Sifton, who wrote for the official publication of a Communist transmission belt a memorable damnation of the "whole capitalist shell game," and in retaining until very recently Dr. David Saposs, the chief economist of the communistic labor relations board, who wrote that "if political action fails, then the workers must unhesitatingly resort to organized force."

So, notwithstanding the conviction of Browder in an action forced on the Administration by Martin Dies against strong White House opposition, the record of the New Deal on Communists and communism is not one that the Democratic National Committee can safely boast of.

The position he has taken, says Walter Lippmann, "is no service to Mr. Willkie and it is a great disservice to the Nation. For it means that the remarkable unity which labor has achieved under the defense program is in danger of being destroyed no matter how the election goes"

Excerpts From Letters

Majority Rule

Is an outworn tradition to be preferred to constitutional majority rule? Is the people's choice to be abrogated in order to serve a questionable tradition? The issue is not the third term, but the constitutional rights of the American electorate.—E. M. Peterson, Washington.

"Sound Principle"

It is futile to seek to belittle the two-term precedent of 150 years by calling it a "tradition." Is there any American so unintelligent as to think that all of our great Presidents from Washington down, took so many pains to establish a mere tradition? It is not a tradition at all, but a thoroughly sound principle in our kind of democratic government. We thought it completely established but it now seems necessary to make it a part of our Constitution.—C. V. Burnside, Washington.

Has Slogan

I doubt if the Democratic National Committee would sponsor distribution of such a slogan as the button "Willkie For President—of Commonwealth & Southern," but perhaps you can use it: "Roosevelt For Ever."—R. W. Griswold, Cabin John, Md.

"Not So Dumb"

The American people are not so dumb as Mr. Roosevelt and Harry Hopkins assume. They will decide this election on their common sense, and conscience; not on smears, fears, whispers, gossip, misrepresentation, prejudice, and partisanship—Wm. J. Knapp, Sistersville, W. Va.

Ray Of Hope

I conscientiously believe that an utter defeat of Franklin D. Roosevelt on November 5 is highly desirable and slightly possible. The defeat of Roosevelt would flash a ray of hope and light into the hearts of millions of our despairing, perplexed citizens.—Howard Carwile, Charlotte Court House, Va.

What Does He Mean?

Among other things Mr. Willkie promises, if elected, is to give jobs to everybody to clean "cynics" and "unbelievers" out of Washington. Quite an undertaking! And the cynics are those who have failed to foster belief in the "American System." That is a grandiose phrase—but just what does he mean by it?—Nemo, Delaplane, Va.

Suits Him

Mr. Roosevelt is good enough to suit me and this third term proposition sounds like an ancient fable, and old folly, and a bunch of political nonsense.—J. E. Stephens, Washington.

How Frank?

How frank is frank? Does it mean telling just such part of the truth as the speaker deems to be to his own best interests. Does it mean telling such part as the speaker believes best for the hearer? Or does it mean the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth? Just how frank is Frank?—A. Grey, Washington.

Willkie's Election "Imperative"

Mr. Willkie's business record is brilliant; Mr. Roosevelt's is one of appalling failure. The simplest unprejudiced mind will grasp the fact that Mr. Willkie's qualifications for supervising our defense are strongly positive, those of Mr. Roosevelt strongly negative. For our physical safety Mr. Willkie's election is imperative; as a step in our moral regeneration, it is doubly imperative.—E. S. Wilder, Charlottesville, Va.

Solution An Amendment

I don't approve of Roosevelt, but under the present emergency I think he is the better man. Willkie knows practically nothing about foreign affairs. I think the solution to the dilemma is to have an amendment to the Constitution that prohibits a President from running for more than two terms unless a national emergency has been proclaimed. In this way, Congress could maintain its status as a coordinate part of the Government.—P. A. Blasangame, jr., Arlington, Va.

"Extent Of Argument"

Unqualified adherence to the unwritten law of the Republic which wisely and under the sanction of the most venerable examples limits the Presidential service to two terms. Boos, bad eggs and phoney statistics seem to be the extent of the argument for a third term.—Paul Manes, Williamsburg, Va.

Some Discrepancies

I would like to point out a few discrepancies in the Willkie campaign: (1) the President is called a "warmonger," certain to send our boys abroad; the President is called a "peacemonger," sending telegrams to Hitler to approve of the Munich appeasements; (2) the President is going to be dictator bound to get a fourth and a fifth term; the President will sneak out if he gets a third term, leaving Mr. Wallace in the White House; (3) the President sent 50 destroyers to England without consulting Congress; he is rash and willful. The President did not prepare us for war; he is timid and wavering.—Hilda Martin, Washington.

American Song

IT WAS a long time ago that an Englishman said: "Give me the making of the songs of a nation, and I care not who makes its laws." And that's a comforting thought at election time, 1940, when the radio shouts at you nightly that, whoever's elected, the country is going to the dogs. For the songs won't change, whatever happens to the Wagner Act; and, if Olin Downes' and Elie Siegmeister's "A Treasury of American Song" (Howell, Soskin, $5) is typical, the heart of America remains sound—sound and sentimental.

"A Treasury of American Song" is typical American—possibly even more so than Carl Sandburg's larger but more personal "American Songbag." It begins with a few noble old New England hymns; pauses for the inevitable "Barbara Allen" and "Springfield Mountain;" takes in "Yankee Doodle;" revives a rousing old campaign song, "For Jefferson and Liberty;" goes to sea with the chanteys; comes ashore with "Weevily Wheat" and "Skip to My Lou;" takes in, impartially, "Oh, Susannah!" "Dixie," the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again;" goes South with the spirituals and West with the cowboy laments; includes "Rye Whisky" and "The Wreck of the Old '97," "Itiskit, Itaskit" and "Frankie and Johnny," and is modern enough for Joe Hill's "You'll Get Pie in the Sky When You Die," a few carefully selected verses of "Mademoiselle From Armentieres," "De Blues Am Nothin' but a Good Man Feelin' Blue" and Woody Guthrie's "I'm Goin' Down This Road Feelin' Bad," which was sung in the movie version of "Grapes of Wrath."

It ranges the history as well as the geography of the Nation. Indeed, in one instance where Mr. Siegmeister found a gap, he filled it. "I have always thought there must be a song somewhere about that unique character of American history and folklore 'Johnny Appleseed,'" he says. "Not finding any, I wrote one." That is, he wrote music for a slightly revised version of Rosemary Benet's verses in "A Book of Americans." I wish he had found music for her even lovelier ballad, "Nancy Hanks."

INEVITABLY, any such book must be compared with Carl Sandburg's classic. It includes fewer songs—some 140, as against 270 songs, or fragments of songs, in the "Songbag." But the "Treasury" covers a wider range; and it is a more musicianly book. All the songs have full accompaniments and master-musicians who do not spell out tunes with one finger, as I do at my best, have always held the frailty of the accompaniments against Carl Sandburg's book. Thirty-odd songs are repeated, in variant versions, in the two books. Sandburg was more interested in what might be called "pure" folk songs; Mr. Downes and Mr. Siegmeister aim at a representative collection of American songs sung at various periods, and include more set pieces such as the Stephen Foster songs. "Darling Nellie Gray" and "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground." They are more interested in the music—Mr. Sandburg in the words.

Yet this is no highbrow collection; this is American song. Even so severe a critic as Mr. Downes acknowledges a certain democracy in musical taste. He, too, hails the common man who "refuses to read a book or gaze at a picture or listen to an opera or symphony which does not say something to him." These are songs which have "said something" to generations of Americans—with a few recent additions which seem likely to do so.

It was not so long ago that critics still remarked that America had no native folk song. Folk songs were supposed to be the product of a "peasant" civilization; America was too young, too hybrid, too rapidly changing to have created musical traditions of its own. Even Cecil Sharp, who took so much interest in Appalachian songs two decades ago, persuaded himself to believe that it was a relic of their Elizabethan heritage. The chanteys were supposed to be all-English, even though one, called "Shenandoah," bore in its reference to the "wide Missouri" its American birthmark.

Then came a period when all true American music must be labeled "African." It is indeed difficult to exaggerate what the Negro has contributed to the American musical tradition—in blues, in spirituals, in minstrelsy, in jazz, in the soft music of Southern speech—but the Negro in Africa did not do what he, and white men working his vein, have done in America. We have our own tradition, and, as Mr. Siegmeister and Mr. Downes repeatedly point out, it is a hybrid tradition. "In no country have there been so many cross-fertilizations as in America, and in no country have these cross-fertilizations given more strength, variety and vigor to the native product."

Questions, Answers

Open Letter To Dorothy Thompson

DEAR Miss Thompson: I reply, with some reluctance, because making the discussion of a public matter personal savors of exhibitionism. I think that as a rule—there are appropriate exceptions of course—commentators would do better to be impersonal. It might be better still if they were anonymous. They would then know they were to be judged solely on the content of their writing, and would be free from any temptation to call attention to themselves by any kind of personal posturing. They would rely on the validity of the judgments they express and have no reason to imitate the showmanship of those politicians who estimate the merit of an action or pose by whether it is striking or novel. Is there any more reason for a commentator to inject his personality into a discussion of principles than for a musician to sing his name in an aria? This goes for statesmen, too. Much of the world's present bedevilment is due to statesmen and others having what Kipling called "too much ego in his cosmos." Restriction of discussion to principles and facts, unconfused by considerations of personality, would help. Apparently America faces an experience calling for the most accurate and searching thought. We must relearn the very basic principles of government, must go through the processes of reasoning which resulted in Magna Charta and the American Constitution. It is desirable that it be done by processes of reasoning only, so far as possible in an impersonal vacuum, unimpeded by emotion.

However, you have addressed a public letter to me. And dialogue, question-and-answer, has been a classic form for discussion since the time of Greece. It has the merit of simplicity and clarity.

IN YOUR public letter to me, you say: "In a time of international crisis, such as this, there is inevitably a concentration of power in the hands of the Federal Government."

Right. On this we agree. And this is the core of the whole matter. Regardless of who is elected next Tuesday, whether Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Willkie, he is practically certain to be given extraordinary powers. It will be done on the basis of international crisis—threat of war. The next President will be given much power for the same reason that President Wilson was given much power as the Great War approached. To Wilson was given power ordinarily held by Congress. To Wilson was surrendered the most precious liberties ordinarily held by the individual citizen.

WILSON, when the war ended, turned back those powers. Wilson turned them back because he was that kind of man. He knew history, he knew the principles of government, he had regard for the Constitution; for the liberty of the individual. Wilson had almost reverential regard. And Wilson knew a great truth—that the individual is free only in proportion as government is held in check. Wilson said: "The history of liberty is a history of the limitation of governmental power . . . concentration of power . . . always precedes the destruction of human liberties."

Just as Wilson was given great power, so will great power be given to whoever is President during the coming four years. And here arises the real question: Which of the two, Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Wilkie, at the end of the emergency, would be most likely to surrender his power, as Wilson did?

Which do you think, Miss Thompson? I need hardly ask. You have already said. Three years ago, when Mr. Roosevelt sent to Congress his measure to change the Supreme Court, you appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee. You told the committee that Mr. Roosevelt's measure was a step toward dictatorship. You said it courteously and cautiously, but you said it very plainly. You began with a polite gesture: "I have never suggested that President Roosevelt is trying to establish a dictatorship." But at once you added: "But I have said that if any President wanted to establish a dictatorship, and do so with all the appearance of legality, this is the way he would take."

YOU TOLD the committee you had seen how revolution was accomplished in Europe. You described, at length and in detail, the steps by which Hitler became a dictator, and the similarity of the Hitler process to what Mr. Roosevelt was attempting. You told the Senate committee that "The modern coup d'etat, by which so many democratic systems have fallen, does not destroy the legal apparatus of the state; the modern revolution is not made by violence."

You said more. You said, in the press, about the court bill and others: "These bills . . . add up to a consistent picture. The picture is of a tremendously centralized government, with a power and authority vested in the President not far from equal to the power and authority vested in Mussolini or in Stalin . . ."

I ask you, Miss Thompson: If Mr. Roosevelt's actions had that direction three years ago, when there was no thought of war—how you can suppose that, after he has now attempted a third term, and if he is elected, and after he is given great powers for war purposes, those powers will ever be surrendered?

Willkie Backer Assails Jackson's Court Record

Richmond, Va., Oct. 30 (AP).—James W. Gordon, Third District chairman of the Democrats-for-Willkie Clubs, issued a statement today attacking the record of Attorney General Robert H. Jackson, who termed Wendell Willkie "the hero of the public utility industry" in an address at a Democratic rally here last night.

". . . It is remarkable to hear Robert Jackson, of all people, posing as defendant of the Supreme Court and of law enforcement. His own record is very revealing in this respect," said Gordon.

"Mr. Jackson was one of the leading proponents of the President's plan to pack the Supreme Court. He bitterly attacked the Federal courts and did all within his power to undermine and destroy the independence of the judiciary. . . ."

Jackson, he asserted, "is the third-term candidate's 'kept' lawyer. Whatever opinion that candidate wants, Mr. Jackson will be sure to give."

Gillette Committee Receives Letter On Hatch Act Charge

Lammot du Pont has notified the Senate Committee Investigating Campaign Expenditures that he has made no contribution since enactment of the Hatch Act to any committee supporting a candidate for national office, it was announced yesterday.

Senator Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, chairman of the committee, said he received the du Pont statement in reply to charges that the Delaware industrialist and others were avoiding the $5,000 limitation on political contributions from individuals by giving smaller sums to various State and local organizations. The charges made specific reference to a check du Pont was alleged to have sent the Republican State central committee of North Dakota. Du Pont wrote the committee:

"Since the enactment of the Hatch Act last July I have made no contributions to any national campaign committee, nor have I made any contribution to any committee with the intent of avoiding the provisions of the Hatch Act, nor have I made any contribution to any committee in behalf of any candidate for national office."

Illegal Solicitation Claimed

Meanwhile the committee received charges yesterday that the National Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government, which is working for the election of Wendell Willkie, has violated the Hatch Act by soliciting contributions from officials paid from funds appropriated for relief purposes.

According to the allegation, made by the Democratic National Committee, the Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government addressed such an appeal last Friday to the personnel director of the WPA at Des Moines, Iowa.

The committee will meet at 10:30 tomorrow in what is expected to be its last session before the election. Witnesses will include officials of three New York life insurance companies who are to be questioned on their participation, if any, in the activities of the People's Committee to Defend Life Insurance and Savings.

Denies Companies Involved

The People's Committee, according to testimony given last week by Robert E. Smith, secretary, has solicited thousands of persons for donations to distribute pamphlets depicting the New Deal as a menace to insurance policyholders.

Smith stated that some of the pamphlets have been distributed by insurance agents, but he insisted the agents were acting as individuals and that their companies were not involved in any way in the campaign. The Federal Corrupt Practices Act bars insurance companies from political activity.

Grand Jury Probe Demanded in Early Bout With Officer

New York, Oct. 30 (AP).—Walter White, president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in a prepared statement today demanded grand jury inquiry into a scuffle outside President Roosevelt's special train here Monday night in which James Sloan, Negro policeman, was injured.

White said the association was demanding "that there be no delay in the police department investigation of the kicking in the groin of Officer James Sloan by Stephen T. Early, and that the facts ascertained be presented to the grand jury immediately."

Early, President Roosevelt's secretary, said in Washington yesterday that he "gave the knee" to one of several policemen who tried to prevent him from boarding the Presidential train.

Absentee Vote Report Waits On Election

Republicans Charge Senate Inquiry Was Merely Cursory

While Republicans continued to complain of what they termed a "cursory" investigation of charges that hundreds of Washington residents are illegally registered in West Virginia, the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee indicated yesterday that it would make no formal report on the inquiry until after the election.

Robert H. C. Kay, chairman of the Republican State executive committee, in a formal statement charged that "no investigation of the charges of illegal absentee voting was made in any county or city of West Virginia but solely in the city of Washington."

"Casual Dismissal"

Calvert L. Estill, Charleston newspaperman, who filed the original charges with the Senate committee, wrote a letter to Chairman Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, stating that he was "shocked . . . at the casual dismissal of our charges of padded registration and fraudulent absentee voting in West Virginia after a cursory investigation by committee agents of one small bit of evidence from just one of the State's 55 counties on just one phase of our charges."

He called attention to a list of Washington registrants in Jefferson County, copied from the records of a hearing before the county court last April.

"It consists of 22 pages of sworn testimony," he said, "that persons named on the list of Washington residents left with you are not citizens and residents of West Virginia and are not qualified to vote here."

Holt Offers Evidence

Senator Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia, meanwhile stated that he has "plenty of evidence if the committee wants it." He said he had been informed by Senator Gillette, however, that the committee is so busy with more important inquiries that it will be unable to act in the West Virginia matter until after election.

Estill in his letter stated that "the investigation of the so-called 'Washington list' from the Washington end only is not a complete, nor a fair and impartial investigation."

Nazis Loot Shops; Strip France of Food

Rations Restricted, Famine Feared Winter's Companion

By James A. Reston.

Copyright by New York Times

London, Oct. 30—The Germans are looting France of its food and wine — especially champagne — according to a spokesman for the British ministry of economic warfare, who said today French rations were being steadily reduced and indicated that the conquered republic is in for a hard winter.

As soon as the triumphant Nazis marched through Normandy and Picardy and chased the bewildered poilus south of the Somme, the spokesman said, they were followed by an army of German economic and agricultural experts, who went through France placing large swastikas in the fields of grain they wanted for German consumption. At harvest time, he added, these fields were stripped and altogether at least 800,000 tons of French wheat were carted off to Germany.

Similarly, the British charge that the Germans requisitioned freight cars and locomotives from French railroads, loaded them with grain and grabbed up nearly a million pigs and rolled them northward into Germany to be used to feed the Nazis during the coming winter months.

Small Stores Raided

Even the stocks in every little grocery store and bakery in occupied France were raided by German soldiers, who, according to the British, bought these stocks with "worthless" German marks and sent them to their families in Germany, where in many cases the food was grabbed by the German authorities. In addition to wine purchased with marks or taken by soldiers and drunk on the spot, trainloads of wine were shipped into Germany, the spokesman said. One French firm alone, he added, was forced to deliver 12,000,000 bottles of champagne to the Nazis.

Because of this policy of direct or indirect confiscation and because many crops were damaged by the invading armies—80 per cent of the French sugar beet crop was ruined in the fighting north of the Seine-Marne line—it was evident that French supplies of essential foodstuffs are dwindling.

Rations Restricted

Already, he pointed out, consumption of butter oil in France, which amounted to 17 kilograms per year per person before the war, is now reduced to 6, and it was also pointed out that the French meat ration is now 12½ ounces a week per person as compared to 17½ ounces in Germany.

In other foods, however, French rations compare favorably with those of other countries. According to British figures, each Frenchman is now entitled to 87 ounces of bread a week, 4½ ounces of sugar and 3 ounces of coffee or a coffee substitute. In addition to these commodities, however, cheese, whole milk, rice and macaroni are also rationed in France.

In addition to this policy the Germans are still getting great quantities of food from the few remaining neutral countries on the continent. The British blockade has virtually stopped actual dispatch of food parcels across the Atlantic from the United States, said the British official, who added, however, that Nazi organizations are now getting money from German-Americans and cabling it to neutral countries in return for food. This traffic has reached such proportions, he said, that several of these neutral countries have recently been forced to legislate against it.

In view of this policy of plunder, ministry of economic warfare officials emphasized that Britain could not and would not relax its blockade to allow food to go from the Western Hemisphere into France or neutral countries which are being treated by the Germans in virtually the same way.

More and more the British are seeing this as a war of commodities. Cutting Germany's supply of oil and food is essential to the British war effort. It is regretted here that more effective action was not taken just a year ago to seize the Nazis' supply of Swedish iron ore and more recently to sabotage the German supply of oil in Rumania. Food is the most important essential commodity that can be effectively stopped and the British intend to stop it.

Woman's Beating Blamed on Lack Of Reformatory

Richmond, Va., ct. 30 (AP).—The lack of a reformatory in Virginia was blamed today by Supt. Paul S. Blanford of the State Industrial School for Boys at Beaumont for an incident in which two runaway boys recently beat and seriously injured a woman assistant at the institution.

The boys, one a 16-year-old Richmonder and the other a 17-year-old resident of Norfolk, were apprehended the day after their getaway and are being held for grand jury action pending the outcome of the condition of Mrs. J. B. Lane, the victim of the attack.

Blandford said that the incident probably never would have happened if the State had a reformatory in the real sense of the word.

Eight Firemen Overcome at School Blaze

Six firemen were recuperating in Emergency Hospital last night from the effects of smoke inhaled at a two-alarm fire in the boiler room of the Lewis Hotel Training School, Washington Circle, early yesterday.

Two other fire fighters were given first aid at the hospital and were released and more than a dozen were doctored at the scene.

Recovering in the hospital last night were Lieut. Raymond Hunt, 45, of Clinton, Md.; Private Scott Valentine, 45, of Arlington, Va.; Private Clarence Dunn, 43, 533 Shepherd Street Northwest; all of No. 5 Truck Co.; Privates Joseph Mattare, 27, of 736 Twenty-second Street Northwest, and John Barber, 25, 2034 G Street Northwest, of No. 23 Engine Co., and Private George Sowerly, 37, of Chillum, Md.

Battalion Chief Harry Baker, 60, of 4114 Garrison Street Northwest, and Private Joseph Lyddane, 31, of 5533 Sherrier Place Northwest, No. 5 Truck, were given first aid and released from the hospital.

Chief Engineer Stephen Porter also suffered from smoke and was sent home by Commissioner Hazen after reporting to his office yesterday morning.

Firemen were called to the school at 7 a. m., less than 30 minutes after most had returned from battling the five-alarm fire at the Munitions Building.

Smoke and flames in the cellar of the school were too much for the smoke-eaters who were almost exhausted from the earlier fire. They fought the flames for almost two hours.

How to Retain Younger Group Becomes Junior League Problem

Average Age of Members Has Jumped Five Years Since Last Census, President Reveals at 37th Annual Luncheon

By Hope Ridings Miller.

HOW TO KEEP the "junior" in Junior League is getting to be a problem.

This startling fact, expressed in muted tones by several members for some time, came out in the open yesterday in a brief speech by Mrs. Montgomery Blair, jr., head of the Washington League.

Presiding at the organization's thirty-seventh anniversary luncheon, she talked briefly on the task of retaining the interest of the younger group and pointed out that the average age of league members has jumped five years since the last census. Whereas the welfare work formerly was carried on by members in their early 20's, it is now generally directed and done by those whose age revolves around 30.

Just what is to be done to get younger members interested has not been decided, but chances are some of the elders in the league soon will manage to do their five years of active work before they become middle-aged and will then take a back seat so younger members can take over the field.

After all, the national Junior League was started as a welfare organization in 1901, after Mrs. Charles Cary Rumsey proposed that debutantes of her year donate their flowers to the city hospitals and worked out a complete program of welfare service for the same group of girls. Similar organizations for younger women soon were started in other cities, and eventually the Association of Junior Leagues of America was founded.

While current work of the Washington Junior League is being carried on largely by members well past the debutante age, the organization is full speed ahead in welfare activity. Citing figures to prove this fact, Mrs. Blair mentioned that members are doing volunteer work in 42 local welfare agencies, and that 90 Junior Leaguers are listed on outside civic boards. She pointed out, also, that the social service department of Children's Hospital is handled entirely by the league and that the annual welfare budget of the organization as a whole is between $9,000 and $10,000.

Before concluding her remarks, Mrs. Blair introduced the guest speaker, Milo Randolph Perkins, president of the Surplus Commodities Corporation, who gave an off-the-record talk.

Gathering Proves Fashion Parade

More than 200 associate, sustaining, and provisional members of the league attended the luncheon, which took place in the west ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel. Bronze and yellow chrysanthemums decorated the speakers' table arranged down one side of the room. Seated there with the league president and Mr. Perkins were current officers and past presidents. Other members had places at round tables for ten.

Always something of a fashion parade, as well as an annual reunion, the anniversary luncheon yesterday lived up to the sartorial standards—and no mistake about it. Registered mink and certified silver fox were all over the place. Smart tweeds, featuring gayly designed plaids, rubbed shoulders with natty black street frocks; and very much in evidence were towering halo turbans, sable neckpieces and voguish costume jewelry.

Several There From Out of Town

Mrs. Blair's black frock, with its turquoise collar and cuffs, was set off with a mink-trimmed turban and a shoulder corsage of orchids. Wearing a becoming moss-green outfit was Mrs. Robert W. Wilson, vice president; while Miss Marion Shouse, second vice president, had chosen a red and green Scotch plaid suit with a matching beret. Mrs. Landon Banfield, treasurer, and Miss Virginia Flannery, secretary, also sat at the head table, as did Mrs. David Karrick, chairman of the house committee, and seven past presidents — Miss Cecil Lester Jones, Miss Anne Carter Greene, Mrs. William North Sturtevant, Mrs. William S. Mackall, jr., Mrs. G. Howland Chase, Miss Virginia Hunt and Miss Alys Downing.

Among the guests from out of town were Mrs. William Blair, of New York; Lady Monson, of London, the former Elizabeth Northrup Powell; Mrs. Guy Shepherd and Mrs. John Groner.

Many Notables Seen in Crowd

To mention but a few others I saw in the throng, there were Barbara Bradley, in a becoming blue ensemble; Mrs. Robert Watson, all in brown; Mrs. Edward Sturdevant, accompanied by her post-deb daughter, Mary Alice; Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, chatting with Mrs. Thacher Winslow, whose green suit, trimmed in leopard, was one of the most attractive outfits in the crowd; Mrs. Marshall Diggs, with her pretty daughter, Helen; Mrs. Edgar Goodrich, Mrs. William Kerkham, Mrs. Samuel Tilden Ansell, jr.; Mrs. Thomas Knowles, whose black frock was worn with a snappy bird-trimmed bonnet; Mrs. B. Lowndes Jackson, Mrs. Ernest G. Warren, Mrs. Merrill Beede, Miss Betty Beale, Mrs. William Rapley, Nancy Glover, Anne Sperry, and so on down—or up—the league list.

Capt., Mrs. Francis Widely Feted

Being widely feted are three current Capital visitors, Capt. and Mrs. Albert T. Francis, and the latter's daughter, Barbara Rafferty, who are staying at the Hay-Adams House.

Capt. Francis, of the Royal Navy, has been assigned to convoy duty on the S. S. Monarch of Bermuda since the beginning of the war. He is now on a two-month leave and recently joined his wife in New York. They have been South for a short sojourn and will stay here until tomorrow.

Yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert gathered in a few friends at her Mayflower apartment to meet Capt. and Mrs. Francis and Miss Rafferty at cocktail time. Earlier, she entertained Mrs. Francis and her daughter at a small luncheon.

Duggan-Thompson Party Is Given

Lawrence Duggan, new political adviser to the State Department, and Charles Thompson, Chief of the Cultural Relations Department of the State Department, entertained yesterday afternoon at a cocktail party at the Cosmos Club.

Guests included members of the State Department Latin-American Division who were invited to meet the members of the Rockefeller group who are also engaged in Latin-American cultural relations work.

Reception Set for Nov. 7 At Russian Embassy

The Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Oumansky have issued invitations for a reception on November 7 at the embassy on Sixteenth Street between 5 and 7 o'clock.

The reception is in celebration of the twenty-third anniversary of the October revolution.

A Merry Twosome At Annual Fete

Harris & Ewing.

Arriving early enough to watch other Junior Leaguers as they come to the anniversary luncheon proves to be an engaging diversion for Mrs. Warren Elliott and Mrs. William B. Kerkam, who were among the 200 members attending yesterday's annual get-together

About the Town

—with Dudley Harmon

THOUGH THE Defense Commission hasn't any chairman, most of the thousands of letters pouring in are addressed to William S. Knudsen. Of all the prominent men called to work at the Commission, the production expert has taken the greatest hold on the general public. People seem to feel cozy about writing to a former immigrant who worked his way up from a laborer in a bicycle shop.

DUDLEY HARMON

Occasionally Mr. Knudsen is late at the office, which means he doesn't get there until 7:45 a. m. His working day usually begins at 7:30. He has few interests outside his job.

EVERYBODY SEEMS to be studying this year. Maybe it's because the times are so grim, but anyway, if you're enrolled in some sort of a course this season, you are definitely out of it. Subjects being pursued range from aviation to Spanish.

A group of girls and young marrieds meet every morning to study cooking. Among the pupils are Louise Stillwell, daughter of Mme. Espil; Zeva Fish, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Hamilton Fish; Sita Finkenstaedt, Betty Stewart-Richardson, Eleanor Flood, Helen Davis and Mrs. Aldace Walker. They spend two mornings a week learning to market. The class is now advanced to the point where it is concentrating on pies and cakes.

ELEANOR FLOOD, incidentally, is one of the most energetic of the local glamour girls. Last year she enrolled in a Foreign Service school and refused to let social engagements stand in the way of her homework. She has just returned to town after a few days in New York. Eleanor is among the Washingtonians who will attend the dance to be given November 9 in Warrenton for British relief.

BUSY WITH ground work at a local airport is Mrs. Donald Hiss, who, in these mad days before election, has also been toiling as a volunteer at the Democratic National Committee. Mrs. Hiss studied flying last winter and is now learning how to send radio messages. Her schoolroom is at the Alexandria airport and she goes two nights a week.

Spanish is all the rage this winter. Among the many taking it up are Harry Covington and Creighton Peet.

POLITICS HAVE never fascinated Ella O'Day as they do her mother, Representative Caroline O'Day. But from New York comes the news that Ella has been campaigning right and left for her mother during the latter's illness. She has made dozens of speeches and done everything she can to pinch hit for the able Representative.

Another campaign team, this one a husband and wife, are Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dewey, of Chicago. He is running for Congress on the Republican ticket and she is helping him. Two years ago he had a try and lost. Mr. Dewey, who is the brother of Albert Dewey, of Washington, was formerly Ambassador to Poland. Both he and his wife have many friends here who are hoping Mr. Dewey makes it this time.

MOST PEOPLE who have been here longer than five years remember Edward Kulikowski as the handsomest diplomat who ever came to Washington. After his escape during the war from his native land, Poland, he has been working in New York. Now his job there is sending short wave broadcasts in Polish back to whomever among his countrymen dare to listen.

Gen. and Mrs. Miles Fete Latin American Officers

Americans Bravely Attempt Conversations In Broken French and Spanish; Axis Envoys Among Those Present

Much broken French and worse Spanish were aired yesterday afternoon at the tea given by Gen. and Mrs. Sherman Miles in honor of the second delegation of Latin-American officers touring the United States defenses. But it was a real tribute to the courtesy of the visitors that no matter how distorted the verbs of the American novices, they were politely encouraging and understanding.

Only two weeks ago Gen. and Mrs. Miles were hosts at a tea for the first group. Time (5 to 7) and place (Officers Club at the Army War College) were the same, but there were many new faces. For one thing, the Axis diplomats had been invited to the party. At the first one representatives of Norway, Sweden, England, and other countries which are at odds with Germany were present.

The Latin-American army officers took turns receiving with Gen. and Mrs. Miles. Also in the receiving line was Mrs. George C. Marshall, wife of the United States Chief of Staff. Gen. Marshall took time off from his duties to attend. He was as pleasant as ever, despite the fact he had arisen at a little after 4 a. m. to go to the fire at the Munitions Building. This fire was the center of conversation during the afternoon. The general's opinion is that it was caused by a short circuit, and that the awnings which hadn't yet been removed for the winter contributed to spreading the blaze.

Miss McLean Among Guests

Col. C. M. Busbee was another early riser for the fire who was on duty at the party. He stood downstairs to welcome the guests before they went upstairs to the ballroom.

Among the guests we saw Miss Evalyn Washington McLean, who topped off her black silk dress with a red fox cape and tiny skull cap. She said she intended to spend most of the winter in New York.

Mrs. Miles wore a floor length frock of black crepe with a corsage of orchids. Mrs. Marshall was also in black.

Mme. Espil, wife of the Argentine envoy, chatted with Gen. Jose Mohr, chief of the Argentine army. She wore a black dress with a bolero and sash and a small-brimmed hat of lipstick red. Earlier in the afternoon she poured tea. The Ambassador gave a stag dinner for the general last night.

Other tea pourers included Senora de Cabero, wife of the Chilean envoy. She said that she and her husband will leave Washington November 10, for New York, where they will spend a week before sailing November 16, for Chile. Senora de Cabero wore a small hat trimmed with feathers with her rust colored dress.

Also at the tea table were Senora de Alfaro, wife of the Ecuadorean Ambassador (he was there too); Senora de Castillo Najera, wife of the Mexican envoy; Senora de Escalante, wife of the Venezuelan Ambassador; Senora de Baron, wife of the Minister Counselor of the Cuban Embassy, and Mrs. Henry H. Arnold.

Russet chrysanthemums and autumn leaves decorated the place. The flags of the South American countries whose representatives were being honored were hung behind the receiving line.

Paraguayan Uniform Most Colorful

The most picturesque uniform was that worn by the Paraguayan army representative. His was pale blue with bright red stripes down the side.

The German Military Attache and Frau von Boetticher, the Japanese Military attache and Mme. Isoda, the Russian Assistant Military Attache and Maj. Barayev were among the members of the Diplomatic Corps present. The Italian Military Attache and Signora Infante were also there.

Other guests included Rear Admiral and Mrs. Emory S. Land; the commandant of the Navy Yard, Rear Admiral George T. Pettingill; Capt. and Mrs. William Spear, of the Navy (he spent seven years on duty in Peru and Brazil; Gen. and Mrs. J. A. Crane, Miss Rebecca Wellington, Maj. Miles Reber, Col. William Shipp, Gen. William Bryden, Capt. Thomas Crystal, and many more.

Cuban Ambassador Honors Army Chief

The Ambassador of Cuba, Dr. Pedro Martinez Fraga, gave a dinner last night in honor of the Cuban chief of staff, Gen. Jose Pedraza, who recently completed the tour of United States defenses.

The other guests were Dr. Jose Baron, Minister Counselor of the Embassy; Capt. Owen Parr, Dr. George Fernandez, Maj. Felipe Munilla, Eduardo Montoulie, Lopez Castro and Eduard Durruthy.

Gen. Pedraza is a guest at the embassy during his stay in Washington. He will leave tomorrow to return to Cuba.

Mrs. C. L. Chambers Gives Luncheon

Mrs. Albert E. James, Mrs. Richard Hoxie and Mrs. Richard Clay Sherrill were guests of honor at a farewell-for-a-while luncheon given on Tuesday by Mrs. Charles Leonard Chambers at her home on Floral Street. Mrs. James will be off in a few days for the Pocono Mountains, and Mrs. Hoxie and Mrs. Sherrill will go soon to Miami, Fla., where they usually spend the winter.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

Fall Rendezvous

I.

Chide me not that all through this day I did not answer the telephone,

To talk endlessly on over what should be done about my club's new constitution,

To chatter with friends who went to the Twitters' last night, who will go to the Gabblers' tomorrow,

To tell oily toned voices I wanted no photographs, sample massages, yard fertilizers or corsets,

To decline tickets to lectures, "bargains" in hardware, posts on committees,

To discuss who will win on next Tuesday, and what should be done about Hitler.

II

For I have been far, far away where the sycamore's white body
Is clad in a thin veil of yellow that catches the sunlight and holds it;
Where the oak trees are wearing champagne and crimson and the silver-lined leaves of the maple
Have turned into gold, and where forest trees, clad in a sumptuous splendor, Surpassing even Fifth Avenue's flash or that of last spring's Champs Elysees,
Have given my soul a moment of ecstacy, treasured against uncertain tomorrows.

III

Upbraid me not that I have failed this day to heed the beckonings

Of anniversary sales where for a song could be obtained towels, pillow cases,

That would be higher priced tomorrow; or that I have not been to call upon the tailor

To have skirts shortened, or seams let out; or that I did not fight with grasping crowds

To find the glittering necklace, clip or gadget, or the belt or collar

To keep me to the forefront of this season's hectic fashion pageant.

IV

For I have been off in a silent place where I have felt the hard autumn earth
Under my feet, and where I have known again the soothing reassurance
That comes from touch of solid soil, eternally unchanged by man's strange manias;
And I have sat serenely enfolded in the kindly warmth of a remote October sun,
And for the first time in days on end have lifted up from small enveloping confusions Pavement bound eyes and thoughts to far enobling horizons.

V

Reproach me not that this day I did not put away in neat containers

All of the wardrobe of summer, nor drive dust from out of my closets

Nor inspect the attic, mend the linen, lay out quilts and blankets,

For winter nights, or send the draperies to the cleaners

Change the slip covers, call the man to see about the paint and paper

And, like an industrious squirrel, make my nest all snug and neat for winter.

VI

For I have been out having this day my farewell tryst with October;
And I have seen the birds flying South toward their winter lands of promise,
And shared with them a lilting sense of far-off mysterious adventure;
And I have smelled the pungent scent of strong fall grass still waving defiantly
In the face of coming death, and I have bared my face to the challenging wind of fall,
And felt my spirit quicken and grow strong and confident to meet whatever lies before it.

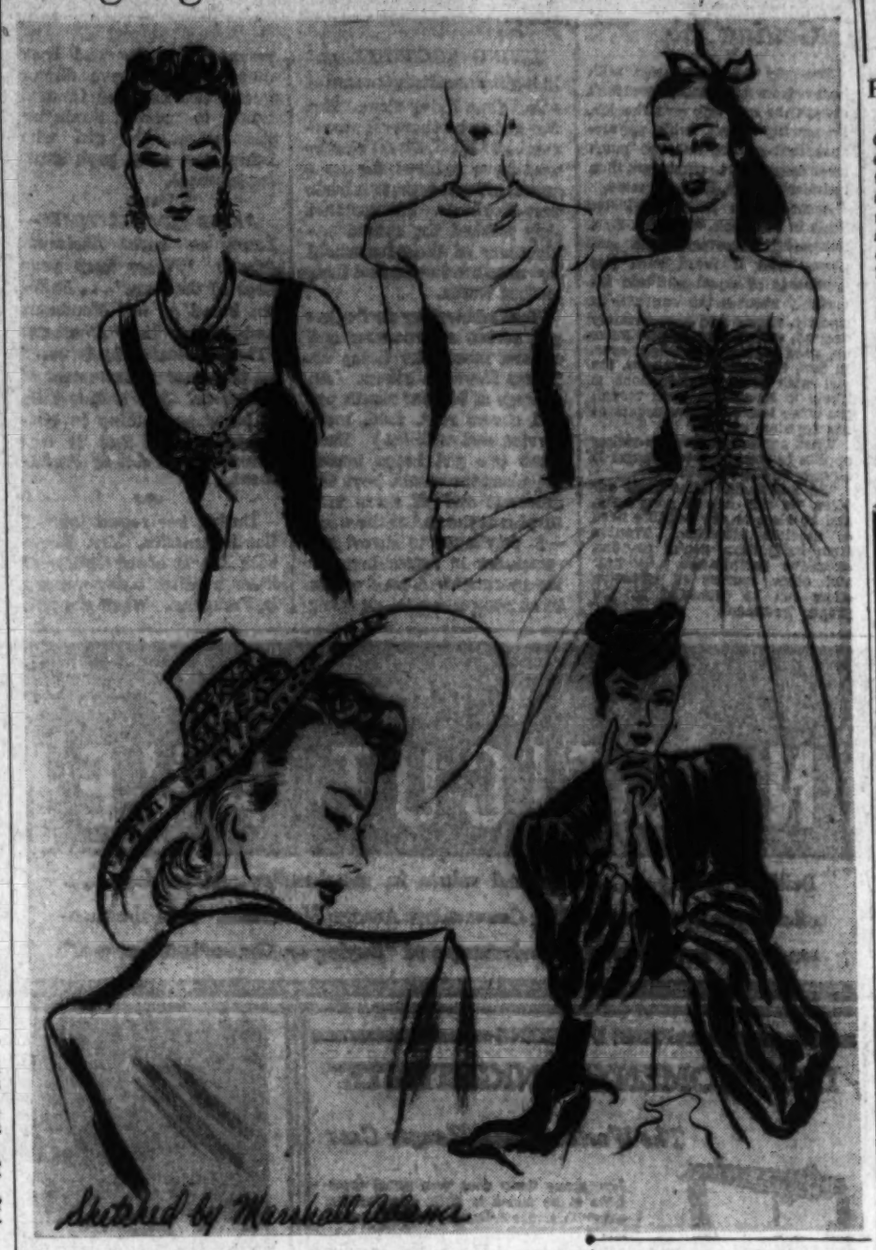
Highlights of the Winter Fashions



By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor.

While covering the Southern wear showings in New York, we took a few notes scribbled above for the benefit of those who "read" in a hurry. These are the highlights of the current scene, and the points to watch for in the coming cruise season. First, there is a blaze of jewels everywhere, both real and paste, the authentic ones being worn by refugees and English ladies whose titles come a dime a dozen in Manhattan these days. Upper left, such a lady is sketched wearing "all her gems."

Next to her are two croquis sketches showing the versatility of neck and hip lines, the sophisticate going in for the pencil-slim sheath with low-tiered hip and cap sleeve, as seen in white or pale yellow at Renee Montague's advance showing. The hit of last week's Waldorf-Astoria Debutante Ball was the demure yet decollete gown with tremendous skirt for the very young.

Lower left if a composite impression of all the designer-original hats in town; a sombrero brim, peaked crown and Guatemalan peasant embroidery. It is sketched with Harvey Berin's revolutionary shoulder which can't split at the seams, due to unique cut and fit. Lower right—Just about every other New York woman piled to overflowing in furs—for coat, hat, muff and even dress accents.

Electric Bulbs Need Special Care

Do you get as much light as you pay for? Or is the brilliance of your electric lights obscured by a film of dust on the bulbs? Experiments conducted by an illuminating company demonstrated that a clean bulb yields from 25 to 40 per cent more light than a dirty one. A 75-watt lamp that is kept thoroughly clean is practically the equivalent of a 100-watt lamp that has been neglected.

Electric light bulbs should be given periodic wipings with a damp, soapy cloth. Remove the bulb, then wipe the glass section only, and dry with a clean cloth. Be sure that both glass and metal parts are thoroughly dried.

Historical Seats Featured in Picture Set

HISTORIC spots in our great Land of Liberty—what American can fail to thrill at these reminders of our glorious past, of our sturdy forefathers.

Six of these famed scenes have been drawn by the magic pen of Vernon Howe Bailey—an artist world-famed for the exquisite picturing of beautiful places.

And from these six original pen-and-ink drawings the Home Institute of The Washington Post has made prints—rich etching-like pictures which will look stunning framed and hung in your home.

Truly a work of art, as well as a faithful reproduction of one of the most beautiful buildings in old Williamsburg — the city where Patrick Henry made his memorable denunciation of the Stamp Act, where youthful gentlemen named George Washington and Thomas Jefferson discussed "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

In addition to the picture of the Williamsburg Palace, our "Land of Liberty" set of six pictures gives you Independence Hall, Old North Church, The Alamo, Monticello and Mississippi Packet. All are 11 by 14 inches, printed in sepia on cream antique paper.

Midriff Styles Call for Reducing

Hollywood, Calif.—Ann Sheridan, star of "Honeymoon for Three," believes some thought ought to be given to the beauty of the midriff since the boundaries of the complexion have been definitely extended.

When Ann wears a bare midriff play suit no excess avoirdupois is evident because she exercises daily to keep a slim waistline. With a midriff evening gown, body tints match those of her complexion. Ann uses a liquid whitener.

Piano, Organ Styles Change, Like Home

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

THERE was considerable alarm, a few years ago, over the increasing tendency for the family circle to scatter of an evening, seeking amusement everywhere but at home. But the radio brought them all back, and now the family collects as snugly around the dials at night as ever they collected about the old base burner in the good old days. With the return to the home fold came a renewed interest in all home pleasures, in games that could be played by two or twenty, in handwork, in puzzles . . . but most important of all came a revival of enthusiasm over home talent music. (The great music available on the radio helped to stimulate this no doubt.

Piano Styles Meet Trend

So we began to buy pianos again. The manufacturers of pianos were ready with new types that would fit graciously into the practical present. And with styles that blend with the interior decorations of today's taste. Not only had pianos come down in size but organs built for home use had been developed, organs nearer kin to the pipe organ than to the old time parlor organ.

The newest innovation in home musical instruments is the solovox an invention of Laurens Hammond who also invented the electric organ and the novachord. It is an auxiliary keyboard of three octaves that attaches to the underside of the piano keyboard and in reality adds organ or orchestral tones to the piano.

But the electric organ is one of the most distinguished home instruments that you can buy. It provides electrically, through grills, almost the same magnificent overtones of a pipe organ but is, of course, much less expensive to install and requires less space . . . in fact it is suitable in an average-sized living room. But if you aren't up to an electric organ and still love organ music, you will be delighted to discover that the old-time organ has been brought up to date and is turning up once more in many homes. Some operate by pedals, some by motor. These are available in both one and two manual models. The most charming variation of this is a modern melodeon which looks a great deal like a spinet but is, of course, an organ type of instrument.

Vertical Type Practical

In pianos, the most practical model is the small vertical piano, a contemporary version of the old console pianos of the last century. These are for small homes, game rooms, nurseries. Slightly larger but still occupying a limited floor space is the spinet grand, probably the most graceful looking of the new smaller pianos. A new type of grand is made with straight back and sides instead of the usual curving lines so familiar. Another is made with a perfectly symmetrical curve instead of the usual off-center curve.

Peanut Butter Cookies for Halloween

Halloween is a holiday like Christmas when children love to celebrate. There are many ways to prepare everyday foods in an appropriate manner for the occasion. Cookies and milk make splendid refreshments to serve children when they come in from playing pranks.

Peanut Butter Cookies—Cream ⅓ cup butter and ½ cup peanut butter together. Add ½ cup granulated sugar and ½ cup brown sugar gradually and cream thoroughly. Add 1 well beaten egg to creamed mixture. Sift 1¼ cups flour once before measuring. Sift flour, ¾ teaspoon soda, ½ teaspoon baking powder and ¼ teaspoon salt together. Add to creamed mixture. Chill dough well, then form into balls the size of walnut. Place balls on lightly greased baking sheet. Flatten with fork dipped in flour, making crosscross pattern. Bake in moderate oven, 375 degrees, from 10 to 12 minutes. Makes four dozen cookies.

To give the Halloween touch to cookies, decorate with black cats. Frost the cookies with a white frosting, and while it is still soft, place a chocolate mint or candy eater in the center. Allow this to set and the frosting becomes firm before applying the melted chocolate. Melt chocolate over hot water and keep just warm enough to prevent it from becoming solid. Use a toothpick to apply the melted chocolate to make head, tails, legs and whiskers of the cat. No two will look alike, but it will not matter, for the variety will give spice to the party.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Minister's Daughter, Wed to Rakehell, Faces Future So Black She Hopes Her Days May Be Shortened; Divorce Seems Unthinkable, So What's the Solution?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In a few days, I will give birth to my second child. My first baby is not yet one year old. I have been married two years to a man who comes from a fine Virginia family, but who has failed to live up to any of the standards laid down by his forebears. He refuses to work, either at home or in business, and he is continuously drunk, quarrelsome and nasty. Almost every night he comes home drunk, usually accompanied by a quart of whiskey and a friend or two who proceed to raid the icebox.

During our marriage, I have supported him, bought our home, furniture, clothing and paid all the bills—including doctors', dentists', and hospital accounts. He tells me repeatedly that he can get all the liquor he wants without working. Gambling is his chief pastime and when it fails to yield money for booze, he casually carts off and sells some of my hand-painted china, silver, mirrors, jewelry, etc. In fact, even pieces from the lowly tool chest have found their way to the local garageman at a fraction of their original cost. (Incidentally, both of us are well educated).

I am at my wits' end to know what to do. My father is a minister and divorce would be most humiliating to him. I have always held my reputation above everything in life. My husband has so humiliated me that I have dropped all my friends, clubs, etc., and now just stay at home, caring for my baby and reading for amusement. But it will be necessary for me to go to work again as soon as I am able, in order to finance the household and feed the babies.

I do not discuss my affairs with anyone, but I sometimes feel that my troubles will surely kill me. I often wonder what effect this worry and depression of mind will have on my unborn child. My future is so black that I hope my days may be shortened, if they must be spent with a man who has no principles. What do you suggest as the solution of my Scriptural problem?

CHRISTIAN MOTHER.

Scriptural Phrase Provides the Answer

DEAR C. M.: Stop living with the man. Surely you can't be so blind as not to see that this is the only, the imperative, the sane and self-respecting solution of your problem. At least, it is solution to the extent of amputating the cause of the trouble. I should say you had Scriptural indorsement of such a move, in these distressing circumstances, in the oft-quoted phrase (see Matthew, 5:30): "And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee," etc.

While your husband is far from being the "right hand" man he should be, he certainly does "offend thee"—polluting the lives of those (his wife and children), whose mental, spiritual and social welfare he should be insuring and enhancing. And I call it character weakness on your part to tolerate his demoralizing presence in the home—toward which he contributes nothing and from which he takes everything of intangible value and much of concrete value besides. So cut him off; cast him away; take legal action to bar him from the premises.

As a minister (i. e., one who aids or comforts, doing the helpful or needed thing), surely your father would be less than competent for his vocation if he cannot meet, with full equinamity, any incidental personal embarrassment occasioned by your firm determination to distentangle your life from the life of a viciously worthless man. He should be among the first to realize the spiritual degradation of your present plight; the first to concede the higher wisdom of preserving essential good, even at the possible expense of dismaying the form-worshiping religionists. His feeling—as you move to dissolve this mistaken contract—should be one of compassionate protectiveness, not of panic-stricken self-concern.

While you may shrink from the prospect of "giving scandal," the truth is that you will be acting to silence gossip, if you put an end to this sorry situation—which undoubtedly has been a matter of behind-the-hand comment almost from the first. I have known more than one "good woman," like yourself, who thought the god-of-appearances was the first to be served—and who wasted a lifetime making a martyr of herself to some no-account husband, "for appearances' sake," when she would have been giving a nobler performance in the eyes of man and the true God if she had dared to stand up and call her soul her own; dared to "hold fast to that which is good," and to have done with the whited sepulcher of vitiating, unconvincing social pretense.

Don't let fear of bigot's opinion deter you from taking whatever action is necessary to guarantee a wholesome home atmosphere for your children. They are your real responsibility, deserving your first consideration. In my opinion, you would be damnably derelict in your duty to them, if you were to commit them passively to life in a home continually overrun by a drunken, downright dishonest father and his cronies of similar stripe. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Women's Page.

Glamour Called 'State of Mind' By Mother of Ginger Rogers

Adviser of Stars In Hollywood Gives Charm Tips

By Ida Jean Kain

LELIA ROGERS

IT HAS ALWAYS been my secret conviction that the average movie star is not, actually, one whit better looking than the average attractive girl but that she makes much more of her looks—and that's the explanation of the ultimate pleasing patina we call glamour!

After talking it over with Lelia Rogers, I am sure this is true. If anybody knows about glamour, she does. The fact that Mrs. Rogers is not known as the mother of her celebrated daughter Ginger establishes her as a fascinating woman in her own right. In addition, she is a successful careerist and the highly esteemed adviser to career girls shooting at screen-stardom.

About glamour, she says:

"It's tied up with beauty, but beauty is mostly a state of mind. And that's something every girl should be taught in the public schools—it's every bit as important as the A, B, C's. There is really no such thing as a homely woman. It is the way a woman feels about herself that makes her homely!"

First, Learn to Walk

Once you get that idea firmly fixed in your mind, the next step—and one that most of the movie starlets have to take—is to learn how to walk. Mrs. Rogers declares that any woman can learn to walk with such pride and grace of movement that merely walking across a room identifies her as an interesting and colorful personality.

How can one learn those things? "By studying the woman in the mirror—that's what mirrors are for!" she says. But that doesn't mean you should just stand there, gazing dreamy-eyed at your good points! Watch yourself in motion and catch yourself in the unguarded, awkward moments. Then you'll know what not to do.

The rules are simple and few: Walk with the chest lifted, head up, a stretch at the midriff, hips held tightly together, and swing the legs from the hips.

"It's worth learning," Mrs. Rogers observes, "for the secret of clothes is posture—not price! A girl can carry a bargain counter frock with dash, or wear a Paris import so badly that it looks like a rag. And here's another thing women should learn: It doesn't matter to the 'boy friend' what they wear or whether they paid $3.50 for it, or $75. What really counts is the way they carry a dress."

Loose Ones Are Best

Another of her clothes tips is never to buy a dress that is too tight—"it will add 10 pounds to the weight! A loosely fitting dress will take 5 pounds off!"

As might be expected, Mrs. Rogers believes in weight control but she finds the most effective method is simply to limit herself to one good meal a day. That's all right, provided the food essentials can be included every day. She thinks every woman owes it to herself to have a set of calisthenics with plenty of stretching.

As you see, most of the things that go into glamour are purely elementary! But Mrs. Rogers is a practical psychologist, too, and says that "it pays to associate as much as possible with glamourous people—glamour seems to rub off! You can get some of it that way!"

Accoustone Also Useful as Home Sound-Proofing

The quietest wall material news is the accoustone sound absorbing material that will help solve the problem of noise. This material has been widely used in offices and other business establishments for some years but has only recently been adapted to any great extent for home use. It is possible to use it for both ceiling and side walls, but it is rarely necessary to have that much of it as a ceiling of accoustone usually puts sufficient quietus on the din.

Another new type of wall material is a plastic resin used on plyboard or wood veneers. Unusual wall materials such as sheath copper and a gold metal mesh achieve spectacular effects. Panels of stainless steel sometimes decorated with contrasting inlays are novel and interesting. Slate and sheet rock and bamboo are other wall materials that stimulate the efforts of the decorators. Rubber for wainscoating as well as linoleum wall material achieve good results in many rooms. Cork continues to be a satisfactory and appealing wall material in certain places.

If you must stick to painted plaster walls no matter how many marvelous alternatives there are, don't despair. There are many ways to enliven a plaster wall. The most favored by the decorators is the use of overscale plaster scrolls, shells and even Grinling Gibbons garlands. And if such fantasies are beyond your budget, keep in mind the fact that anaglypta overlays, made of an inexpensive composition material, are offered in a wide selection of motifs. These can be attached to any plaster wall to achieve a decorator distinction.

Horse Radish Vinegar Gives Zip

Sweet smiles greet vinegar when it's horse-radish vinegar! Use it in making salad dressing; to pickle tongue, beets; to season cole slaw, tomato juice. Or, just put it on the table to serve with hot beets or spinach, sliced tomatoes or cucumbers, hash!

To make horse-radish vinegar put one cup vinegar (cider, white or wine) in a one-pint glass jar. Add 1/3 cup (1 ounce) of sliced fresh horse-radish root and 1 medium-sized onion (sliced). Seal jar tightly. Let stand at least two days before using, then strain through a fine sieve. Store in bottle and use as needed.

Good Grooming Biggest Asset In Getting Job

The girl who graduates with honors from a business school isn't always the one who gets the job. Personality assets, with appearance first on the list, are much more important to employers than technical ability, it would seem.

According to Louise Hollister Scott in her book, "How To Be a Successful Secretary," the employer who is faced with two applicants of equal aptitude invariably chooses the one who is smartly, neatly and appropriately dressed, with inconspicuous make-up, good posture and bright eyes. In fact, the author maintains, the girl with these qualifications is likely to be chosen, even though the other less attractive applicant has far more ability.

What applies to the job-seeker applies to the girl whose name is already on the payroll.

"Be fastidious," Miss Scott advises, "in the care of your body, and be alert to any possible need of medical attention. Trouble from indigestion, dental cavities, excessive perspiration, oily hair and other sources of offensive odors can be corrected by the proper treatment.

A Woman's Washington

By Jean Brownell

LIVING TOGETHER and liking it sometimes is more of a feat than living alone. But five girls who share an apartment at 1801 K Street Northwest have reduced the communal arrangement to a business-like basis. The fact that they marked the second anniversary of their household last month indicates that their method works.

Here's how they do it: One girl serves as treasurer and collects money for living expenses from the others. (An average of $42 per month per girl covers rent, food, maid service and utilities.) Each week one girl keeps house; she plans the meals, buys the groceries and—if there is a surplus at the end of the week—is privileged to invest the remainder in furnishings for the apartment. A maid comes in at noon to clean, do their personal laundry and cook dinner. They have dinner guests two or three times a week; to prevent strain on the budget, the girl who brings the guest pays extra for his meal.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES—Lawn on lower Sixteenth Street: "Please keep your dogs off the grass" . . . Bulletin board of the Merchants and Miners liner Chatham: "The nautical mile is based on the exact measurement of the earth. The statute mile is based on nothing in particular except that it was passed by an Act of Parliament. . . ."

During her recent tour of South America, Mrs. Elizabeth Enochs of the Children's Bureau visited a day nursery in Paraguay. When she left, a charming young nurse presented her with a box containing a souvenir of her visit. It turned out to be a hand grenade which the girl had found during the Chaco War. Mrs. Enochs accepted the gift with thanks, but worried the rest of her trip for fear some customs official would find it and lock her up as a Fifth Columnist.

Returning from her vacation, a local resident was distressed to note that her neighbors in the next-door apartment house had torn down the fence around her garden. As she surveyed the wreckage from her kitchen window, a woman emerged from the apartment house with a clothesline, entered the fenceless garden and proceeded to hang some diapers on the apple tree.

Woman's Safety Committee Hears Traffic Experts

Underwood & Underwood

Parking problems of the District were discussed yesterday at the meeting of the Woman's Safety Committee at the Sulgrave Club. Photographed in front of the club are (left to right) Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the D. C. Motor Club of the A. A. A.; William A. Van Duzer, director of vehicles and traffic; Mrs. George C. Thorpe, chairman of the committee; Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, and Burton W. Marsh, traffic engineer of the A. A. A.

District to Query Motorists on Parking

Cards to Be Placed on Windshields, Capt. Whitehurst, Highway Director, Tells Woman's Safety Committee

By Jessie Ash Arndt

The Post Club Editor.

"How long did you park here?" will be the first question on a card Washington motorists will find on their windshields within a few days—but it won't have to be answered in court.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways for the District told members of the Woman's Safety Committee yesterday, questionnaires on parking will be put in cars as a part of the survey authorized by Congress last spring in an effort to solve Washington's parking problem.

"How long did you want to park here?" "For what reason did you park here and to what locations did you go while parked?" will be other questions. "How often would you park in this area for the reason you give if there were better and more convenient places to park?" is another. All of them are designed to give a basis for conclusions as to where parking facilities are most needed and what effect better facilities would have on business in the downtown section.

Burton W. Marsh, director of the traffic and safety engineering department of the American Automobile Association, who was the first speaker on the Safety Committee's program, had already pointed out the economic implications of lack of parking facilities and arterial systems in the central business area. It means that business moves out to suburban subcenters and reduces the revenue from the downtown district on which the municipal government depends for its chief income, he said.

He also asserted that the parking problem can no longer be solved at the curb at all—that "we must look off-street for the solution."

He declared "we face a dilemma, for the American public is not willing to pay what it costs to provide the facilities it wants for parking where it wants them."

The study of the parking problem is only a part of the highway planning survey, which is expected to result in safer, wider arteries for motor vehicles, more direct routes in the downtown area and less congestion on the streets, Capt. Whitehurst explained.

An inventory of off-street and on-street parking is already 75 per cent completed but it will be late spring before a report on the study will be ready, he said. A survey of origin and destination of traffic also is being made. To be an intelligent survey it must be run through different seasons, he pointed out.

Answering a question, Capt. Whitehurst said underground parking had been considered but that such facilities would cost approximately $1,200 per car.

William A. Van Duzer, director of vehicles and traffic for the District, said the survey of origin and destination would aid in a plan to stagger the opening and closing hours of different Government departments. This is now followed in some areas but results in those who have the early hours getting all the parking spaces for the day. One of the members of the committee suggested reserving half the adjacent space for the department having the later hours.

Mrs. George C. Thorpe, chairman of the committee, presided at the meeting, which was held at the Sulgrave Club and was attended by representatives of some of the leading women's organizations in the city, including Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel, president of the District Federation of Women's Clubs.

At the luncheon following, Countess Bohdan de Castelane, sister of Mrs. Walter E. Tuckerman, a member of the committee, described her escape from France. She arrived last Saturday from Portugal, where her husband is now. Their chateau in Bordeaux was a haven for refugees until the armistice.

TODAY Girl Scout Troop 75, of Bethesda, under the leadership of Mrs. Carl Ingman Aslakson, will give a tea at Girl Scout headquarters, 1825 M Street, in celebration of the birthday of Juliette Lowe, founder of the organization. Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn, third national vice president, who recently came to Washington to reside, will be guest of honor.

Mrs. Aslakson, the former Marian Corbin, has the distinction of being the only Girl Scout leader in the District who was a member of Juliette Lowe's original troop in Savannah, Ga., in 1912. Most of the original 11 members still live there and she visits them when she returns to Savannah. She is scheduled to give a radio talk today, recalling some of her experiences in the first troop.

Assistant leaders of Troop 75 at the District, are Mrs. Robert Farrington, Mrs. Paul Lindsey and Mrs. Scott Reading. They are assisting a committee under the chairmanship of Mrs. William Maddox in arrangements for the tea. Members of the Girl Scout Council, associate members and the regional director and publicity chairmen have been invited as special guests.

PLAN EXHIBIT—The Washington Alumnae Club of Pi Beta Phi will sponsor its annual settlement school meeting Tuesday night, November 12, in Sorority Hall on the George Washington campus.

A motion picture, showing activities at the school, will be shown while Mrs. Frederick Shelton talks on the founding, history and place in the community at Gatlinburg, Tenn., where the school is located.

Mrs. R. H. Pledger, president of the Washington Alumnae Club, will exhibit products of the school, including weaving and other handicrafts.

The institution was founded by Pi Beta Phi in 1912 and trains the mountain children in basketry, weaving and conservation of resources from kindergarten through high school. The settlement school articles are sold among the alumnae clubs and in the Rockefeller Center Handicraft Shop, in New York, under the name of "Arrowcraft," taken from the sorority's emblem, the arrow.

Jews' World War Record Lauded At Institute Session

A large and representative attendance of Jewish women yesterday marked the opening of a series of monthly sessions of the Joint Jewish Women's Institute at the Jewish Community Center under the chairmanship of Mrs. Maurice Bisgyer.

After greetings by Rabbi Solomon H. Metz, president of the Community Council, there was a discussion of "The Status of the Jew in America Today" by Meyer Jacobstein, distinguished economist of Brookings Institution, and Paul Richman.

Jacobstein lauded the patriotic record of the Jew as a historical fact and cited his participation with the armed services in the World War which was greater in proportion to the Jewish population than that of other groups in proportion to theirs, he said. He also asserted that Jews should not be classified as capitalists, radicals, bankers or paupers any more than other people.

Mr. Richman gave a historical summary of Jewish ideology.

Soroptimists Entertain 4 Career Women

Plans for a nutrition conference to be held at the University of Maryland November 22 as part of the "women in national defense" program were outlined by Dean Marie Mount, one of the four career women who were honor guests yesterday at the luncheon of the Soroptimist Club, at the Willard Hotel.

As part of the Defense Commission's plan, she explained, land grant colleges in each State have been asked to take the lead in some one field. A nutrition committee is being formed in Maryland to include representatives of all departments in the State carrying on technical nutrition programs. Dean Mount had just come from the initial meeting in Baltimore yesterday morning.

The first effort, she said, will be to improve general health conditions through better nutrition and then be ready to undertake further tasks in connection with defense.

'Funnies,' Youth P.-T. A. Topics

The influence of the "funnies" on school children was the subject of discussion yesterday at the closing session of the two-day Parent-Teacher Institute at George Washington University. One (which is not among those that appear in The Post) was cited as an example of their being used for instilling subversive ideas in the youth.

There was a diversity of opinion as to the effect of the comic sections in the newspapers. Mrs. C. D. Lowe, president of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers said the matter had been the subject of a long discussion at the recent meeting of the board of the national organization which she attended in Chicago.

The morning session of the institute yesterday was devoted to an explanation of the various children's services in the District and the afternoon to a panel on the implications arising out of previous discussions. Dr. Mitchell Dreese was chairman of the panel, which brought out that educators saw a definite job to be done in training youth to face the future realistically but were afraid to introduce new ideas because of the reaction of general public opinion.

Crittenton Circle Presidents Meet at Tea

A tea for the presidents of the circles of Florence Crittenton Home was given yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. C. J. Riggall, 6916 Beechwood drive. The affair was designed to bring the presidents together so they could exchange ideas on their year's work.

The members of the circle extension committee were hostesses. They were Mrs. Riggall, the chairman; Mrs. Frederick Kerby, Mrs. George Price and Mrs. Edwin Yates. Assisting them were Mrs. A. J. Somerville, Mrs. John Chase, and Mrs. Thomas A. Robertson.

Miss Jean Cole, superintendent of the home, poured tea.

Mission Institute Holds Symposium

The second session of the three-day Missionary Institute of the Washington Council of Church Women was held in the Calvary Baptist Church yesterday. Mrs. H. C. Briscoe and Mrs. Frank Eggington were the presiding officers for the two classes. Mrs. R. H. Miller and Mrs. J. Gould Wickey gave the invocations.

The symposium on the topic, "Uprooted Americans," was continued under Mrs. Lelia Rothenberger of Indianapolis, as the home mission study. Discussion of the book, "Dangerous Opportunity," was held under Mrs. H. C. Michael, of Johnstown, Pa., as the foreign mission topic.

Canada May Use Only U. S. Plane Designs

Decision Is Viewed As Vital Help to Hemisphere Defense

By Devon Francis.

Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Oct. 30.—A decision by the Canadian government to concentrate all Dominion aircraft production on planes of American design, which might have far-reaching effects on defense of the Western Hemisphere, was reported in American aviation circles this week.

The plan, broached to at least two United States airplane plants, looks toward the gradual abandonment by Canadian manufacturers of British-design machines.

The only official statement on the subject was made last June by Charles D. Howe, then minister of munitions, in the House of Commons.

U. S. Tools Used

United States machine tools and production methods were being used as much as possible in Canadian aircraft factories, working to British designs, he said. He intimated there would be a growing swing toward the production of United States-type aircraft as well.

The Canadian move is important to United States rearmament and hemisphere defense because the Dominion factories will become, in effect, extensions of older and larger plants on this side of the border with a standardized output.

Moreover, under the close collaboration existing between the Washington and Ottawa governments, an interchangeability of aircraft parts would work to the advantage of both countries in time of hemisphere emergency.

Back of the Canadian government's decision, aircraft circles here said, was the relative difficulty which Canada encountered in making British-design airplanes.

The magazine Aviation this month estimated 17,000 persons were employed now in all fields of Canadian aircraft production, exclusive of an assembly company working on British war orders. By 1941, it said, 360 warplanes a month will be coming from Canada's plants.

That compares with about 126,000 persons currently employed in United States plants.

Big Orders on Hand

Eight major Canadian companies have orders on hand for 3,800 planes valued at $125,000,000. Several United States-design planes, largely nonmilitary, have been manufactured in Canada for years, either under license or in plants in which United States manufacturers have held an interest.

The Toronto Financial Post recently implied that Canada was now building most of its own planes and would continue to do so in increasing measure.

"That it was a mistake to attempt to build British-type aircraft in this country," it remarked, "and to make production here absolutely dependent on Britain is now a conviction that is pretty general both in aviation and government circles."

The body was taken to an undertaking establishment in Laurel to await a coroner's investigation.

Illinoisan Shucks 46 Bushels of Corn In 80 Minutes

Davenport, Iowa, Oct. 30 (AP).—Irving Bauman, slender Illinoisan who twice reached hailing distance of agriculture's hall of fame, today captured the 17th National corn-of 31 expert nubbin tossers. husking championships in a field

Establishing a national record, the 27-year-old Eureka farmer barely nudged out the Iowa ace, Marion Link, 25, of Ames, to garner the coveted title, a gold cup and $100 in cash.

In the 80-minute husking duel, Bauman had a net score of 46.71 bushels, to Link's 46.36 bushels, or a difference of .35 of a bushel.

Ryan Urges Planes, Pilots For British

Also Proposes U. S. Dispatch Warships To Aid of Empire

Copyright by New York Times

New York, Oct. 30.—Maj. Gen. John F. O'Ryan, World War commander of the Twenty-seventh Division, urged today the immediate dispatch of a substantial part of the United States air force and its trained personnel, together with destroyers, light cruisers and submarines, to aid the British.

Speaking before a luncheon of the Engineers' Club, Gen. O'Ryan declared that "if Hitler promptly vanquishes Britain he will succeed in reducing the United States to a second-class power and without any actual invasion of the country."

Despite British assurances that, come what may, the British fleet never would be surrendered, the general said that necessarily that fleet would "be delivered intact" to the Germans.

"A vanquished people are not permitted to do other than obey orders," he continued. "Otherwise they have not been vanquished. The consequences to the people of Britain, were they to sink their fleet at the last moment, or transfer it to the United States, would be so punitively dreadful to a distracted people that their new leaders, chosen by acclaim to accomplish as best they can the restoration of livable conditions, will repudiate any plan or agreement which would add to the misery of the population."

With the British fleet, combined with the German, Italian and French navies, and aided by "the possible cooperation of the Japanese fleet," the Germans would have overwhelming sea power, Gen. O'Ryan said.

He declared Hitler would use that sea power "to levy upon and collect from American major cities on the Atlantic seaboard heavy indemnities for relief from air bombardment for the ensuing two years."

"In view of the inferiority of our naval forces, their dispersion and the fact that these cities (incredible as it may seem to responsible-minded citizens) have no antiaircraft defenses and will not have for a year or more to come, I doubt whether their populations, by virtue of any Spartan willingness to do so, would suffer fruitlessly as an alternative to compliance with Hitler demands," the general continued.

"In all probability they will pay on the barrelhead at the designated time and place rather than sustain an air blitzkrieg which in a few days and nights in material damage alone will result in loss far exceeding the payment demanded."

Gen. O'Ryan recommended that Congress be forced "to act boldly and decisively at once."

"Let every American organize his friends," he said, "to send telegrams to members of Congress urging legislation with the least possible delay directing that a substantial part of our air force (bombers, interceptors and fighters) and their well-trained personnel, together with additional destroyers, light cruisers and submarines be sent at once to insure the security of the British fleet, to keep open the supply lanes to and from British ports and to cooperate with the British defense generally.

"We need send no troops. They could not be used. Fortunately Hitler can do nothing effective against us, except rave, while the British fleet remains under British control."

Naval Units Slip Key West In Secret Move

5 Destroyers, Plane Tender May Be on Way To French Possessions

By the Associated Press

Official secrecy was observed last night concerning the movements and mission of five destroyers of the neutrality patrol and a seaplane tender which sailed under sealed orders from Key West, Fla., yesterday.

There was unofficial speculation that the ships might be on a protective mission in connection with French possessions in the Western Hemisphere but officials would not discuss the question.

Another possible explanation advanced here was that the neutrality patrol may have received new orders to guard against sea warfare between European belligerents in South Atlantic waters.

Secretary of the Navy Knox said he could give no information and Secretary of State Hull also would say nothing on the subject.

Hull said, however, that a reply still had not been received from the French government to a communication President Roosevelt sent to Vichy last week while French negotiations were in progress with the Axis nations. This message was said to have dealt mainly with the question of French possessions in the New World which have been the subject of diplomatic exchanges with France for several months.

It is generally believed here that if Germany should appear likely to obtain control of these possessions, the United States would occupy them in cooperation with other American republics.

The French Embassy here advised the State Department yesterday that there was no foundation to "rumors" of territorial cessions by the French government to Germany or Italy, or use of French strategical bases by those powers.

Despite this, however, there were indications that official concern persisted regarding these possessions, as well as the French fleet. But whether any immediate action was planned was an official secret.

The destroyers and sea plane tender left Key West after being hurriedly provisioned and fueled for an extended voyage. Shortly afterward, 11 naval bombing planes took off for an undisclosed destination.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Senate Group To Investigate Wire Tapping

Suspected Tampering With Supreme Court Lines to Be Probed

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 30.—A Senate subcommittee said today through its counsel that an inquiry would be started in Washington Friday to determine whether the telephone wires of United States Supreme Court justices had been tampered with during an important case.

Coincident with this announcement, the committee counsel, William Power Maloney, declared that the Federal investigators had uncovered "startling facts" concerning the unlawful practice in New York City and involving "high public officials."

"Innumerable circumstances have been discovered," Maloney said, "where telephone wires of public officials and private individuals have been tapped and the right to privacy of these persons invaded at the instance of men holding high public office for no discernible purpose other than that of purely personal gain."

Maloney said hearings on the practice would begin Friday in the Senate Office Building and that the alleged Washington wire-tapping occurred in October, 1938, at the time the Tennessee Valley Authority case was before the highest court.

He made the allegations in a typewritten statement issued after he had appeared before Federal Judge Murray Hulbert with two attorneys representing prospective witnesses.

They were Hyman J. Fischbach, counsel for Robert C. La Borde, head of the Investigators' Technical Service, and also for James Elliott and Edmund O'Connor, former employes of the New York Telephone Company, and Clifton Weidlich, representnig George Owens, another prospective witness.

Maloney said La Borde was subpenaed two weeks ago, had agreed to appear at the Washington hearings and that Elliott and O'Connor also would appear. Argument on Owens' subpena was put over until next Wednesday, when Weidlich told the court he believed his client would "stand on his rights."

Former United States Attorney George Z. Medalie, investigators said, also will be heard, although he is not involved in any way in the acts complained of. He has not been subpenaed.

In his statement, Maloney said the "connecting link has been forged in an unbreakable chain of evidence which will link the activities of disreputable private investigators and wire-tappers to those of men high in public and private life by whom they were employed."

"The revelation of this snooping and eavesdropping, even though thinly disguised in some cases as incidental to the investigation of alleged violation of law, will shock those who in good conscience are opposed to thoroughly un-American practices."

Paint Trade Group Opens Quarters Here

Association Begins Convention, Hears Speech by Young

New headquarters of the National Paint, Varnish and Lacquer Association—the old Morton Mansion at 1500 Rhode Island Avenue Northwest—were dedicated yesterday as the trade organization opened its fifty-second annual convention here.

Established as a memorial to the late Norris B. Gregg, one-time president of the group and pioneer organizer of the paint industry, the headquarters building was formally opened with an address by James W. Young, director, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce.

Young traced the history of the paint industry from its first census in 1849 and praised the association for its remarkable strides and "contribution to the romance of American business."

Ninety-one years ago, he pointed out, the country had only four paint factories employing but 22 wage earners with production valued at $77,000. Today, Young said, there are more than 1,000 establishments employing some 31,000 persons with a production output of $538,000,000. Credit for the expansion, he added, goes to the trade association.

"This great development of the trade association is no accident," Young continued. "It is the result of a need in our modern economic order. In our typical American way, progressive and far-sighted men in the industry saw this need and invented the trade association to meet it."

Brief remarks also were made by Fletcher W. Rockwell, president of the National Lead Co., and Norris B. Gregg, jr. An inspection of the building followed dedication ceremonies.

The association opened its meeting at the Mayflower Hotel earlier in the day with discussions of production and technical problems of the industry. The convention will continue through tomorrow.

The Rev. Edward G. Goetz, pastor of Zion Lutheran Church, brought greetings on behalf of the Washington Lutheran Ministerium, of which he is president.

Responding, Dr. Foelsch, formerly pastor of Zion Lutheran Church of Sunbury, Pa., said he hoped he would be able to "carry on" as well as his predecessors. A quartette, composed of Mrs. George Chaillet, Charles Whitten, Ernest Palmer and Mrs. Mitchell Marques, sang.

First Staticless Stations to Get Licenses Today

50 Applications For Permits to Build Pending Before FCC

The Federal Communications Commission today will grant the first commercial licenses for operation of frequency modulation—the staticless radio—broadcasting stations.

More than 50 applications for construction permits are pending, but only nine are reported to be ready for approval. There are now 20 experimental stations, but most of these have requested commercial licenses.

While the development of frequency modulation broadcasting commercially is expected to proceed gradually, due to the competition of standard amplitude modulation stations and the necessity for obtaining new equipment, some radio engineers predict that ultimately it will supplant present day radio.

Several radio manufacturers have placed FM receiving sets on the market although transmission so far has been entirely experimental. Others are expected to appear as soon as transmitting stations spread.

Because of the comparatively short range of FM broadcasting, the Federal Communications Commission will be able to grant many more permits than it can in the congested standard broadcast band.

Citing the claims that FM transmits with greater fidelity and less interference than standard radio, the FCC in adopting rules for commercial operation hailed it as "one of the most significant" contributions to radio in recent years.

To assure a dependable amount of FM program service during the development period, the FCC requires a daily, except Sunday, minimum operating schedule of at least three hours during the day and three hours at night. At least one hour in the daytime and one at night must be distinct from standard broadcast programs in the same area.

As a safeguard against monopoly, the FCC has ruled that no person or group may control, directly or indirectly, more than one FM station in the same area.

U. S. Broke Word on Paint Agreement, Says Union Official

Issues in the strike of painters on the new Social Security Building, a national defense project, boiled down last night to whether the structure's walls are dry enough for application of four coats of oil paint, as the strikers demanded.

The union's executive board, in a statement giving "our side" of the controversy, said one reason the painters walked out two weeks ago was that the Government had broken its word to them.

Original specifications for painting the Railroad Retirement Building and the Social Security Building provided for four coats of oil paint.

Rushing the jobs to completion for occupation by national defense agencies, the Government asked the union to paint the Railroad building's walls with two coats of casine paint, which could be applied before plaster had dried, instead of the specified four coats of oil paint.

Although it meant a loss of "thousands of dollars" in wages, the union's board said last night, the request was granted—on the condition that the other building would be given the regular treatment when the time came.

But, said the board, when the time came two coats of casine were ordered—meaning another large loss in wages—so the painters went on strike.

A Government spokesman, however, said the agreement stipulated oil paint only if the plaster was dry by the time for the work. It was not, he said.

The union, on the other hand, claims the plaster was dry enough on all but one floor and the oil paint should be allowed.

The union's board vociferously denied the painters were unjustly holding up defense work, pointing out that President Roosevelt had promised the defense program would result in no curtailment of labor's rights.

Nevertheless, the board said, "we have practically torn up our by-laws and thrown them out of the window in order to cooperate."

The union broke its laws by agreeing to casine paint on the railroad building when original specifications provided for oil paint and by breaking all precedent in working men on Saturdays and Sundays, the board declared.

In addition, the board said that while the painting trade was one of the few with unemployed skilled workers in its ranks, the painters always got the short end on speedup jobs because they were the last workers on any project.

If the strike is not settled by completion of the building, the Defense Advisory Commission will move into the unpainted structure, according to Government officials.

Citizens Told D. C. Tax Rise Must Not Be

Federal Defense Levy Load Enough, McCoach Says at Petworth Meeting

Engineer Commissioner McCoach told the Petworth Citizens Association last night that if he could help it there would be no tax increases in the 1942 budget.

Speaking to the association's annual banquet in the Petworth Baptist Church, McCoach said that the Commissioners are working on the 1942 budget now, and added:

"The majority of citizens are agreed with me that taxes should not be raised when in all probability there will be an increase in Federal taxes to pay for the defense program."

Essentials Provided

He pointed out that maintenance of the present tax level will mean that "we can't give everything for which people ask." But he declared that the Commissioners have "provided liberally for the essentials" in social services.

McCoach stated that in the future, appointments for District jobs will be made from among "our own citizens" in the "vast majority of cases."

Corporation Counsel Keech, who followed the Commissioner, told the more than 100 listeners that their "servants in the District Building are anxious to know your wishes." He added: "They want to comply with the will of the people."

Officers Installed

The association's new officers were installed by James G. Yaden. The invocation was pronounced by the Rev. C. E. Hawthorne, the flag salute was led by Raymond T. Haugh, of the American Legion, and the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Charles W. Wood.

The new officers are George W. Potter, president; Harvey O. Craver, first vice president; Mrs. Edith L. Phelps, second vice president; Raymond E. Gable, secretary; Haugh, assistant secretary; Joseph H. Grosman, corresponding secretary; W. N. Barret, financial secretary; John S. Hamil, treasurer; Senes B. Passmore, sergeant at arms; Harvey O. Craver and Ernest F. Henry, federation delegates.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown

The Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress presents the annual Founder's Day concert Wednesday night in Coolidge Auditorium. Artists: William Kroll, Jack Pepper, Nicholas Moldavan and Victor Gottlieb, constituting the Coolidge Quartet. Program: Quartet No. 2, Op 59 (Eugene Goossens), Quartet No. 10 (Darius Milhaud), Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3 (Beethoven).

Ray C. B. Brown

Observing the birthday of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the Foundation which bears her name, presented the annual Founder's Day concert last evening to members of the Friends of Music in the Library of Congress. Assembled in Coolidge Auditorium, the invited guests enjoyed the first performance of two string quartets composed for the occasion by Eugene Goossens and Darius Milhaud, and a reading of Beethoven's third "Rasumovski" quartet. The premieres were in the cathoven's third "Rasumovski" quartet, which had undergone a change in personnel, Jack Pepper replacing Nikolai Berezovski as second violin in the company of William Kroll, Nicolas Moldavan and Victor Gottlieb.

Imaginative poesy has always been a characteristic of the music of Eugene Goossens, together with an idiom consciously modern yet not wilfully perverse. In his new quartet he has given free rein to his fancy. The work is rich in ideas expressed with divers devices and conceits of refreshing whimsicality. The first movement approximates sonata form with a development section surprisingly adorned with quasi-improvisations and a fugato passage. Harmonic dissonance spices the music enough to give it piquancy.

The lovely and meditative andante is based either upon a British folk theme or a remarkably faithful imitation of one. A long, lyrical melody passes from one instrument to another like a tender lament, and the chordal accompaniment is delicately diversified. Its mood is sombre, as though current calamities had been in the composer's mind, but the sadness is kept from despair by a glow of hope.

In the scherzo, marked "Alla burlesca," a prankish humor comes into play with many tricks of technique such as harmonics on muted strings. The trio has a fine melody of appealing quality. The last movement is an epilogue in which themes previously heard are interwoven with new material.

Darius Milhaud is a tone-poet who prefers the epigram to the epic. His concise style avoids prolixity as though it were the plague, and his new quartet, like its nine predecessors, is compact. The four movements are so compressed that they seem to take little more time than one movement of a leisurely quartet. Yet one is always aware of the validity and the potency of the ideas.

The first movement has a faint Keltic flavor and a remote beauty as of an ancient legend. The second movement is a dance with a lively theme treated in the neat and graceful manner of Fr'meau. This is followed by an impassioned dirge which gives way to an animated and vigorous finale. The total impression left by the work is that of keen intelligence, poetic intuition and intense vitality.

3. HALLOWEEN ROYAL FAMILY—These youngsters will reign today over the Halloween party at Virginia Avenue Playground. Yesterday youngsters brought an apple apiece which entitled them to one vote for the rulers. Left to right—Aubrey Hite, 11-year-old "king," of 1103 Tenth Street Southeast; Vincent Adams, 13, "crown prince," of 715 Eighth Street Southeast; Anna Chinault, 13, "crown princess," of 906 Virginia Avenue Southeast, and Catherine O'Neil, 15, "queen," of 1009 L Street Southeast

Washington hopes to celebrate the ancient harvest festival of Halloween tonight in the well ordered communal manner that in recent years has begun to supplant more robust techniques.

Instead of transplanting fence gates and tallowing windows a considerable portion of the populace will restrict itself to parading in costume and to witnessing antiaircraft demonstration, bonfires and other of the milder forms of community diversion.

But just in case the new order of Halloween may not be widely appreciated, Metropolitan Police Chief Ernest W. Brown last night ordered extra police details for duty tonight and issued them special "instructions."

"Innocent pranks will be permitted, but damage to property or annoyance to persons will not be permitted," the chief decreed.

Brown's instructions definitely banned window soaping, auto marking and flour throwing.

"In the past two years," he pointed out, "there has been considerable damage to street-lighting equipment. You will instruct the members of your commands to give this phase of vandalism special attention and take immediate action in such cases where property is damaged."

Brown asked members of the department to "enter into the spirit of Halloween, but in dealing with "persons who are conducting themselves in a manner to cause offense" to "assume a courteous but firm attitude, and, where circumstances justify, arrests will be made."

Brown emphasized that the "turning in of false fire alarms . . . must be prevented."

Among the city's community celebrations will be the North Washington costume parade, starting at Georgia Avenue and Quincy Street Northwest and ending in front of the queen's court and reviewing stand at the Macfarland Junior High School at Thirteenth Street and Iowa Avenue.

The antiaircraft demonstration will take place at Takoma Recreation Center at 9 p. m. in connection with a community bonfire.

The Community Center Department has announced celebration to be held in division 1-9.

The Brookland Woodridge Business Association and the Rhode Island Avenue and Burroughs Citizens Association will treat the neighborhood "gang" to a funfest today. At 3:30 p. m. there'll be a costume parade, with prizes, for children between the ages of 3 and 12, in front of the Taft Junior High School, Eighteenth and Perry Streets Northeast. Later in the evening there'll be a celebration for the older children in front of the school.

Other celebrations, not previously announced, include a dance at 10 p. m. in the Mayflower Hotel of A. F. G. E. Lodge No. 47, an observance at 8 p. m. in the Francis Recreation Center, Twenty-fourth and N Streets Northwest, and the annual Halloween party of the Forest Hills Citizens Association at 8 p. m. at Thirtieth and Brandywine Streets Northwest.

Md. Groups To Greet President

Democrats to Turn Out for Roosevelt Dedication of Bethesda Building

President Roosevelt's dedication of the National Institute of Health and National Cancer Institute buildings at Bethesda, Md., this afternoon will be the occasion for a large turnout of Montgomery County Democrats, according to plans announced yesterday.

An estimated 5,000 partisans from Silver Spring, Takoma Park, Kensington, Wheaton and other towns are expected to comprise the reception committee at the Montgomery County-District line on upper Sixteenth Street.

From that point the President and his party, followed by the greeters, will take the East-West Highway to Bethesda, then north to the site of the ceremony. The program will begin at 4 o'clock. The President will begin to speak at 4:15 and his address will be carried by all three networks.

LeRoy Gray, of the Silver Spring Young Men's Democratic Club, announced last night that the District line greeters will be headed by Lacy Shaw, chairman of the Democratic Central Committee for Montgomery County; O. W. Robey, county commissioner, and Mrs. Ralph Wells, president of the Democratic Women's Clubs of Montgomery County.

There will be seats for 1,000 and standing space for upward of 5,000 others at the dedication. Guests of honor will include Mrs. Roosevelt, members of the Cabinet and Supreme Court and the following:

Senators George L. Radcliffe and Millard E. Tydings, of Maryland; Mrs. Luke I. Wilson, donor of the 86-acre tract on which the health institute is situated; members of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also Dr. Irvin Abell, chairman of the National Defense Health Committee and former president of the American Medical Association; Maj. Gen. James C. Magee, Surgeon General of the Army; Rear Admiral Ross T. McIntire, Surgeon General of the Navy; Wayne Coy, representing Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator; Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and Dr. Lewis H. Weed, chairman of the Medical Sciences Division, National Research Council.

Working for Washington

This is the thirty-second article in a series about citizens associations in the District of Columbia and their efforts to make the community a better place in which to live.

The job of keeping downtown Washington beautiful for visitors and residents alike has been assumed by the far-seeing city-wide membership of Logan-Thomas Circle Citizens Association.

"It is this section that people see when they come to Washington and for that reason it should be kept worthy of the Nation's Capital," thinks Mrs. Ella M. Thompson, president of the association for the past 15 years.

Having no set boundaries, the unit draws its members from all parts of the city and concentrates on downtown streets, trees, parks, circles, playgrounds and police facilities. Monthly meetings are held in Mrs. Thompson's large music studio at 1120 Rhode Island Avenue Northwest on the second Tuesdays.

Mrs. Thompson was the first woman elected to head a citizens association in Washington. That was in the days when "Ma" Ferguson was Governor of Texas. Mrs. Thompson also succeeded her husband in office.

Circles, and ways of keeping them from being too confusing to visitors, are pets of the organization. It was responsible for changing Logan Circle's name from Iowa Circle back in the 20's. Mrs. Thompson christened the Thomas Circle underpass last spring.

And members have long favored the Scott Circle underpass, which has now been approved. They object, however, to present plans calling for the pass to go under Sixteenth Street instead of Massachusetts Avenue.

One major complaint the unit has now is the use of circles for ball games and playgrounds for children. Especially objectionable are men playing football on newly seeded circle grounds, members think.

Each March the association gives its annual banquet for members and guests. Social programs also are held monthly, after regular meetings, with refreshments.

One of the principal aims of the association this year is to obtain a playground for the white children in downtown Washington. Elimination of semisium areas in the sector is another, as is the preservation of old landmarks and historic mansions here.

"Some time, I suppose, we will devote all our efforts to preserving landmarks of the city," Mrs. Thompson said. "There are scores of famous old homes in old Washington which must be preserved."

Virginia Society Officials Chat With Correspondent

PRESIDENT OF THE SOCIETY OF VIRGINIA. Col. Christopher B. Garnett (right), reelected at last night's meeting, and Mrs. Richard A. Allen, member of the executive council, talking to Sir Willmott Lewis (left), correspondent of the London Times. Sir Willmott, speaking on the anniversary this month of the Battle of Yorktown, found "the world upside down again just as it was in 1781"

D. C. Churches Will Observe All Saints' Day

Mass, Communion Will Be Features Of Tomorrow's Event

Especially honoring saints for whom there are no fixed festivals, All Saints' Day will be celebrated here tomorrow.

Masses in Catholic churches and Holy Communion in Episcopal churches will feature the local observance of the feast day, which originated in the conversion of the Roman Pantheon into a place of Christian worship in the seventh century, and its dedication by Pope Boniface IV to the Virgin and all the martyrs.

The anniversary of that event was originally celebrated on May 1, but subsequently changed to November 1. All Souls' Day, observed principally by Catholics, will fall on Saturday, when prayers will be offered for souls in purgatory.

Low masses will be said at St. Matthew's Cathedral, Rhode Island Avenue near Connecticut Avenue Northwest, tomorrow at 10 a. m.; at St. Patrick's, Tenth and G Streets Northwest, at 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 a. m. and 12:10 p. m. and at Immaculate Conception Church, Eighth and N Streets Northwest, at 6:45, 7:30 and 9 a. m. and 12:15 p. m.

St. John's Episcopal, "Church of the Presidents," led by Dr. C. Leslie Glenn, will be the scene of Holy Communion tomorrow at 7:30 and 12 noon, while from 2 to 6 p. m. members of the parish and friends will gather at St. John's Orphanage, 1922 F Street Northwest, to help celebrate its seventieth anniversary. Tea will be served from 4 to 6 p. m.

Washington Cathedral will celebrate All Saints' Day at its regular daily services at 7:30 a. m. and 4 p. m., and also at a Holy Communion service at 11 a. m., with the Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, Dean of Washington, as celebrant. There will be no sermon.

Holy Communion will be administered at Epiphany Episcopal Church, 1317 G Street Northwest, at 7:30 and 10:30 a. m., with a special commemoration at the latter service for members having died during the past year. Dr. Ze Barney Phillips, rector and Senate chaplain, will preach.

Col. Garnett Again to Head Society of Va.

Col. Christopher B. Garnett was reelected president of the Society of Virginia at its annual meeting last night in the Willard Hotel.

The society chose Dave E. Satterfield, jr., first vice president; Judge Walter T. McCarthy, second vice president, and Maj. Robert S. Hudgins, third vice president. Other officers elected were I. Chance Buchanan, secretary; Fred P. Myers treasurer, and the following members of the executive council.

Mrs. Richard A. Allen, Dr. Larry E. Arnette, George P. Grove, Col. Edwin A. Halsey and James A. Somerville.

Speaking on the anniversary this month of the battle of Yorktown, Sir Willmott Lewis, correspondent of the London Times, "found the world upside down again just as it was in 1781."

"We are in the presence of a revolution," he warned "which will not end with this war." Decades of readjustment will follow the war, he said, and described the conflict for Britain as a fight "for a chance to prevent the reversion of the world to the old law of tooth and claw."

Runaway Horse Hits Auto, Has to Be Shot

A runaway horse collided with an automobile at Fifth and Crittenden Streets Northwest yesterday and was crippled to such an extent he had to be killed.

Mrs. Catherine Cole, 31, of 638 Independence Avenue Southwest, a passenger in the automobile operated by her husband, Merle Cole, suffered minor bruises and was given first aid by a physician.

According to police, the horse, driven by Robert Jenkins, colored, 21, 305 F street Southwest, was running out of control and ran through a stop sign. John Newshad, a humane society officer, shot the animal.

Church School Work Praised At Institute

Dr. McGregor Says Its Objectives Are Incomparable

No other agency can duplicate the life-transforming objectives of the church schools, Dr. Daniel A. McGregor, director of the department of religious education of the National Council, Episcopal Church, said here last night.

He spoke at the annual fall meeting of the Church School Institute of the Washington Diocese at St. Stephens and Incarnation Episcopal Church, Sixteenth and Newton Streets Northwest, where at an earlier business session the following were elected to represent the institute on the Diocesan Department of Religious Education:

Miss Frances Withers, director of religious education at St. Thomas' Episcopal Church; Mrs. T. K. Burchard, of St. John's, Georgetown; Mrs. F. Granville Munson, St. Albans; the Rev. C. Ralph Mengers, vicar of St. John's, Mount Rainier, Md., and Miss Maude Cutting, president of the Young People's Fellowship of the host church.

The Rev. William M. Bradner, Canon Precentor of the Washington Cathedral and chairman of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, introduced Dr. McGregor. Dr. Paul D. Wilbur was host rector.

Discussions on church school problems and a supper preceded Dr McGregor's address.

Second-Hand Men Quizzed About Police

Attorney Charges Victimizing, Asks Audit of Goods Taken by Officers

Forty-two second-hand dealers yesterday were called to headquarters and questioned by Metropolitan policemen about charges that Metropolitan policemen used their badges to obtain "friendly gifts" and discounts.

Attorney Richard A. Harman, in a letter to the District Commissioners, said the dealers have been victimized and urged that an audit be made to learn whether all property taken by officers from second-hand dealers was turned in to the department.

The Commissioners referred the charges against the department to the department for investigation and, after consultation with Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, Inspector Bernard Thompson assigned Detective Lieut. Clement Cox to make the inquiry.

Statements Recorded

Cox yesterday began calling second-hand dealers to Headquarters, where he questioned them, while a police stenographer took down what was said.

Police officials declined to discuss the progress of the investigation until Brown reports to the Commissioners.

The Post learned, however, that questions to this effect were asked:

"Have you ever made the police officers any presents?"

"Have you ever sold articles to the officers?"

About a score of dealers were directed to return today.

Afraid To Complain

Attorney Harman said in his letter to the Commissioners that the second-hand dealers are afraid to complain of injuries, because the department has an influential voice in the granting of secondhand dealers' licenses. He urged that this be taken away by placing all the licensing authority elsewhere in the District government.

The charges and move for an audit and investigation followed a protest by District Attorney Edward M. Curran against practices of the police department property division. This office is custodian of all property seized by officers. When property reported stolen is recovered from secondhand dealers the clerk tells citizens that he cannot return it to them, over the dealer's claim to ownership, until the owner pays the dealer what he paid for it.

"Down Argentine Way" Overlooked Castanets

New Technicolor Production at the Palace Has Everything Else, Including First Explosion of Brazilian Bombshell on Screen

"DOWN ARGENTINE WAY." Twentieth Century-Fox Technicolor picturization of a story by Rian James and Ralph Spence, adapted to the screen by Darrell Ware and Karl Tunberg, starring Don Ameche, Betty Grable and Carmen Miranda, with Charlotte Greenwood, J. Carroll Naish, Henry Stephenson, Katharine Aldridge, Leonid Kinskey, Chris-Pin Martin, Robert Conway, Gregory Gaye, Charles Judels, Edward Fielding, Edward Conrad, Fortunio Bonanova, Armand Kaliz and Frank Puglia, with specialties by Nicholas Brothers, Thomas and Catharine Dowling, Six Hits and a Miss and the Carmen Miranda Band. Directed by Irving Cummings. At Loew's Palace.

IF YOU WANT TO ENJOY an attack of the rumbatism, this is it.

The "plot" of "Down Argentine Way" may not be anything to write the folks about—although it might be worth a pretty postage card, at that—but it is so persistently interrupted by Latin-American rhythms, unfurled in quick, kaleidoscopic, Technicolored succession, that nobody gives a hoot. Mack Gordon and Harry Warren have cooked up a mess of tunes and lyrics for the handsome item opening on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater this morning that should get them a monument, or something, from those addicted to the tricky tempos of congas, rumbas, tangos and the like. The business is started in the very first flash of the film by Carmen Miranda, the incendiary Brazilian bombshell, singing "The Souse American Way," to translate her sibilant phonetics into cold type—very cold, indeed, compared with her!

BELL

Then the plot bobs up. Don Diego Quintana is shipping a boatload of his thoroughbred jumpers from Argentina to the States under the chaperonage of his son Ricardo. They are to be sold, but with the stipulation that no horse shall be knocked down at any price to any American named Crawford. Don Diego has a mad on with Willis Crawford dating 'way back to their school days when Willis is supposed to have done Don Diego out of his girl. So the first bidder at the swank American horse show is Glenda Crawford. Ricardo made the fatal blunder of falling in love with her first and remembering papa's admonition afterward. So Glenda follows him back to the Argentine and sets in motion some horrendous doings—like masquerading as someone else, training the ace Quintana steeplechaser to be a flat racer, winning the old man's affection and then his hatred, and so forth, etc. All this has been maneuvered with a sumptuousness that is almost unbelievable and in Technicolor's most opulent manner.

It is the songs, ensembles, dances and specialties, though, that will get you. "Two Dreams Met," "Down Argentine Way," "Nenita" and "sing To Your Senorita" are familiar cadences by now, but not the way they are executed on the screen. Practically all of them are given the inflated stature of "production numbers." Carmen Miranda, all loaded down with her bizarre beads, bracelets, jewelry and gadgets, brilliant in their gaudy Spanish hues, has an equal number all to herself—in that opening flash and later in her night club scene. In addition to "South American Way," these are "Bambu," "Mamae en Quero" and "Touradas en Madrid." Of course, you can't make head nor tail out of the Portuguese lyrics, but you can eat of the singer's eyes, hands and undulating, ah, er, hips. Betty Grable runs her a close second in all departments except eyes and hands and even Charlotte Greenwood cuts loose with one of her inimitably grotesque dances. The specialties—neatly woven into the action, by the way—by the Nicholas Brothers, Thomas and Catharine Dowling, Six Hits and a Miss and the Carmen Miranda Band, are exceedingly top-drawer.

These gaily chromatic goings-on are interpreted, one way or another, by a cast of extravagant dimensions. Don Ameche, as Ricardo; Betty Grable, as Glenda; Charlotte Greenwood, as Binnie Crawford, the debutante's dream of a perfect chaperone; Henry Stephenson, as the irascible Don Diego, and the Miranda are the mainsprings of the whole thing. They are not, however, by any means the whole show. J. Carroll Naish, erstwhile "heavy," turns in an exceptionally able comic character portrayal as Don Diego's aged horse trainer and the veteran Charlie Judels and Leonid Kinskey add to the comedy in the roles of an opera bouffe diplomat and the gigolo who beats him to the social punch. There are scores of others who contribute notably to the lighthearted gayety and swirling beauty of a musical frivolity of the first rank.

"Soak the Old," a new release in the "Crime Does Not Pay" series, substituted for "Eyes of the Navy," to be shown later at the Capitol; "Lure of the Trout," of which the title is sufficiently explanatory, and the picturized "News of the Day" are the supplementaries of a feature of such magnitude and magnificence that it could get along nicely without any.

Reporter Finds Ginger Rogers Upset by Mirror, Hair, Rumor

By Frederick C. Othman

United Press Hollywood Correspondent

Hollywood, Oct. 30.—We watched Ginger Rogers talking to herself today and never have we seen anything quite so complicated.

The picture was "Kitty Foyle," a dramatization of Christopher Morley's best-selling novel about a Philadelphia stenographer, and the script called for Miss Kitty Rogers to be looking in a mirror, arguing with herself about whether she ought to marry Dennis Morgan or James Craig.

So the image in the mirror talked back to the real Miss Rogers, as you will see when the picture is released around the first of the year. This entailed as much machinery as we've ever seen on a movie set, plus Director Sam Wood with a stop watch, and Miss Rogers with a worried expression.

The mirror was a fake. There was a wooden frame around it, but instead of silvered glass there was a transparent screen upon which a picture of Miss Rogers, playing her image, was thrown. So she stood in front of this image of herself—and argued back. Her image's words came out of a loud speaker; her own words were picked up by a microphone; the photograph of the image was rephotographed and if all hands don't go nuts in the doing, the results will be as noted above.

Worried About Her Hair

Between jousts with the machinery, Miss Rogers came over and talked to us. Her principal concern seemed to be her hair and the public's reaction thereto.

Two pictures ago, when she starred in "Primrose Path," she dyed her hair black. Nobody paid any particular attention. In her last movie, "Lucky Partners," she did this same black hair into a couple of trick rolls, behind either ear—and there was the devil to pay.

"Everybody kicked," she said. "Only place they didn't was Boston. There the girls wanted to know the methods I used in doing it up. Elsewhere the columnists and the customers said my hair looked too severe and they didn't like it and I don't know what all."

So she bowed to public opinion. Her hair is a kind of chestnut color now, and curly. It looks fine, too, though we personally liked it black just as well.

Another little problem of Miss Rogers concerns the widely published reports lately that she's about to do another dancing picture with her old partner, Fred Astaire.

This would be okay by her, but she said that RKO studios, to which she is contracted, have said nothing about any such plans. Neither has Astaire. Neither has she.

Plot Slightly Scrambled

Around the corner from Miss Rogers' stage we dropped in on Harold Lloyd, the movie producer. He doesn't wear glasses, only an intense look, and pants that could stand pressing.

He is producing a picture tentatively titled "Three Girls and a Gob." Only trouble there is the film has only one girl, Lucille Ball. And it has three gobs, George Murphy, Edmund O'Brien and Lloyd Corrigan.

The original story was written by the late Grover Jones. He died before the script was completed. So Lloyd promoted his gag man, Frank Ryan, to screen writer and had him and Bert Granet do the scenario. When they had finished, Jones' idea was so thoroughly rejiggered that even the title didn't fit. Producer Lloyd now is thinking up another name.

"What I need is a yarn with the same spirit my old pictures had," he said, "but with a more mature man than I used to be. I can't make the people believe I'm a boy any longer."

Lloyd also is looking for a young actor who can perform like he used to. Once he finds the right man he plans to remake some of his old time hits, like "Grandma's Boy," "Safety Last," "Welcome Danger," and many another you doubtless recall.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

New York, Oct. 30 (INS).—Often wondered what happened to that technicolor short Dave Butler made on the great Seabiscuit right after the pride of the turf won the $100,000 pot at Santa Anita. Well, my friend, it was so good that it has been held all this time for a much more important RKO Picture, temporarily titled "Blood Will Tell." In the meantime, Dave has been a guest at the famous Charlie Howard breeding farms near San Francisco photographing Seabiscuit's colts and getting plenty of additional material.

PARSONS

All this footage will be the background of a feature-length racing opus with an all-star cast. Particularly interesting to me is word that Phyllis Brooks (who is one of the blonde highlights in Cole Porter's "Panama Hattie") will get one of the top roles. RKO has never relinquished her contract and they are planning to bring her back to Hollywood on a bandwagon not unlike the campaign launched by Twentieth Century-Fox for Betty Grable.

What a day for Jimmy Stewart yesterday! His draft number came up an hour after M-G-M informed him he was definitely going into "The Ziegfeld Girl" lineup. "That's what you think," said Jimmy grinning from ear to ear, "maybe I'll be going into Uncle Sam's lineup first." Be that as it may, the popular and lank Stewart has been in and out of "Ziegfeld Girl" so often he should feel like Finnegan. But with fate and Uncle Sam willing, the minute he finishes "Come Live With Me" with Hedy Lamarr, he'll start making love to Lana Turner in the follies musical which also includes Judy Garland, Tony Martin, Charles Winninger and Hedy Lamarr.

My two blonde stars, Ilona Massey and Binnie Barnes, who have gone over like a million in New York, will be in the same picture when they return to the coast. Binnie has been signed to do the comedy honors in "New Wine," the Franz Schubert operetta in which Ilona will be the prima donna. It's a good boxoffice move on the part of Dr. William Sekely, who is producing the musical with Alexander Korda, if you ask me. Speaking of Binnie—she earned a lot of new friends the other night. After our midnight show she and Mike Frankovich went up to 125th Street to make an appearance at the Apollo Theater for Bill Robinson, who was staging a benefit performance there with members of his race for London sufferers.

Snapshots of Hollywood and New York collected at random: Saw Gloria Swanson, looking surprisingly young, dancing at the Stork Club. She has been campaigning for Willkie and was accompanied by the Willkie radio expert; Addison Randall was with Ruth Taylor and Paul Zuckerman; Cal Swanson, of the J. Walter Thompson office, was celebrating the arrival of a daughter. He phoned Danny Danker the good news; our backstage telephone buzzes busily for Brenda Joyce—but her heart is in Hollywood and she will probably wed Owen Ward when she returns from her trip; Sabu is such a hit with his song, "I Want to be a Sailor" I hope they let him sing in a picture some day. Don't know whether Bill Orr works harder with his swell imitations—or dodging the New York debutantes on his trail.

Jane Pickens, once Eddie Duchin's heart, was at the Stork in a party including Minna Wallis—who is having a time for herself here; Fred Astaire is in town very enthusiastic over his new picture "Second Chorus;" Mischa Auer was at the preview of the Dietrich picture with Maria Montez; Bill Gargan got such notices for his work in "They Knew What They Wanted" he'll get costarring billing with Martha Scott in "Cheers For Miss Bishop;" Mary Taylor, Dorothy di Frasso's pretty niece, is representing stage magazine on the coast; Travis Banton heads to Chicago with Carmen Miranda's complete wardrobe for "Road to Rio." Carmen is playing a short engagement there and Twentieth can't wait for fittings as the picture starts November 11.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Honor for Father Starlet's Thrill

Bonita Granville is getting the biggest thrill of her life these days.

After her daily chores in "Gallant Sons" are completed, she appears nightly in Charlot's Revue. In the show are actors and actresses who played with Bunny Granville, her father, during his years as a vaudeville headliner. Among them is Fanny Brice.

"And the biggest thrill I get is when Miss Brice introduces me as 'Bunny Granville's daughter,' not as a Hollywood starlet," declares the young actress.

Colorful Story Locale

A ramshackle old boarding house in New York City forms the setting for much of the gripping action of R.-K.-O. Radio's latest feature film, "Stranger on the Third Floor." Peter Lorre heads the cast of this unusual drama of peril and retribution.

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

At last our producers have realized that Charlotte Greenwood is a pet of the public. 'Cause why? She's never let 'em down. Now she's coming into her own again in the picture, "Her Honor, the Mayor." Can't you just see Charlotte running the town? And what a job she'll do! Being of the people, she knows a lot about them. Born in Philadelphia and reared by her Uncle Jack, who was a barber. Spent most of her early girlhood playing in the window of his barber shop. One day when he said, "Come out of that window," Charlotte replied, "Why,? Every time I kick and make faces, people stop, laugh, and come in for a shave." She was only 11 then, but very tall and gangling.

HOPPER

When she went for her first job in the theater, she lined up with a bunch of chorus girls, and Director Ned Wayburn shot a look at her and said, "Good heavens, what's that?"

"I'm a dancer," said Charlotte.

"Well, prove it!"

She started throwing her legs and arms in the air, and got the job.

The show didn't last long, but Sam Bernard saw her and hired her. After that she went dramatic, with another girl. But every time she spoke a serious line, she did it with gestures, which stopped the show—so the second night it became a comedy, and she's tickled our funnybones ever since.

In a few weeks the country will be flooded with Marxes. Chico's going a-touring with his own band, which he calls his "Ravellis"—they'll all dress like Chico. Groucho, at the football game, said, "Get hold of that hot trumpeter on the Loyola team. He's terrific." "Don't want him," said Chico. "Why not?" "Loyola lost the game, didn't they?"

You can start laughing now, because silent Harpo is going on a lecture tour with Oscar Levant. Can you think of two more hilarious zanies? Afterwards Harpo may do a play with Max Siegel in New York. They're trying to get "When Ladies Meet" and weave it into a musical.

Bernard M. Baruch hasn't publicly come out for a certain candidate, but his family is campaigning for Willkie. Speaking of that, have you read Clare Booth's latest book, "Europe in Spring?" Mostly about victims of fear, and a great deal about Dorothy Thompson's behavior the last time she was over there, which is rather amazing, to say the least.

Paul Guilfoyle tells about his friend, John Beal, who was discussing a certain book with one of our glamor girls the other eve. When John asked if she'd read it, she said, "No, I don't read—I like to keep my mind open." Albert Basserman says, "Honest confession may be good for the soul, but it's bad for the reputation."

Frank Morgan, present commodore; Frank Borzage, John Ford, Gene Markey and Owen Churchill all served in that capacity. Maybe the boys just wanted a reunion.

MacMurray Loses Girl in Picture

Hollywood this week listed the first romantic defeat, cinematic variety, against Fred MacMurray.

MacMurray, who has been Hollywood's most consistent winner-of-lady's-hands-in-films with a batting average of 1000 per cent, 25 wins and no defeats, doesn't win the pretty heroine's hand in "Rangers of Fortune." Patricia Morrison, a dark-eyed beauty, is the girl in the film. MacMurray loses her, not because he doesn't try hard, but because the scenario awards her to Dick Foran, her other suitor.

New Comedy Tops Incoming Theater Week

Brock Pemberton Play And Three Musical Films Are Billed

"GLAMOUR PREFERRED." Brock Pemberton, producer of "Personal Appearance" and "Kiss the Boys Goodbye," again will offer a comedy about filmland when this new production opens a week's engagement at the National Theater Monday evening prior to its New York run. Written by two noted script writers of the screen, Florence Ryerson and Colin Clements, the farce peeks into the intimate affairs of a Hollywood glamour boy. Mr. Pemberton's customary director, Antoinette Perry, has staged the play, Margaret Pemberton has designed the costumes and the cast includes Flora Campbell, Louis Sorin, Maidel Turner, Lex Lindsay, Henry Vincent, Wynn Caboon and Glen Langan. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

Earle

"RHYTHM ON THE RIVER." Bing Crosby, Mary Martin, Basil Rathbone and Oscar Levant, of "Information Please" fame, are the leading players in this new musical film which, with "Down Argentine Way," reviewed this morning, and "Too Many Girls," forms a current avalanche of musical-comedy pictures. The story concerns Crosby's and Miss Martin's adventures as ghost-writers for Rathbone, a composer who has lost his ability to write hit tunes. "Ain't It a Shame About Mame?" "Rhythm on the River" and "Only Forever" are the already popular tunes. "Charm Bracelet" is the stage revue, featuring the Milt Herth trio, the Del Rios and Johnny Woods. Opens tomorrow morning.

Presented by the Community Center and Playgrounds Department, this production was postponed from the Sylvan Theater schedule because of rain. Alice Louise Hunter is directing a group of boys and girls from the city's playgrounds to supplement the already announced cast.

Railroaders Have Eyesight, All Right

Jackie Cooper came away from the filming of a railroad train sequence for "The Aldrich Family in Life With Henry," with a profound respect for the optimism of a railroad brakeman.

They were shooting at night, on location at the Santa Fe Railroad's South Pasadena flag stop some 20 miles from Hollywood, and the train was fringed by scores of 500,000-candle-power studio lamps.

Yet, when it came time for the train to start, a brakeman—a real one, not an actor—swung his little six-volt lantern from the train's rear platform—and the engineer, 200 yards up front, saw it.

The Rhythm Sits at the Piano!

Taylor Continues Dramatic Contest

Robert Taylor will continue to sponsor the national intercollegiate one-act playwriting contest which was inaugurated last year by Criterion, literary magazine of his alma mater, Pomona College.

Robert W. Armstrong, Dartmouth College senior, was the winner last year of the Taylor first-place award of $50, second and third places going to Richard Meier of Reed College, and Norman Felton of the University of Iowa.

Taylor has guaranteed prize money for so long as Criterion continues the competition.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Oct. 30.

WHEN AMBASSADOR Kennedy arrived here on the Clipper last week-end, there was much speculation as to the contents of a large package he was carrying. It bore the official seal, and the writing on the outer wrapping revealed that it had been sent to Kennedy, in London, from the American Embassy in Paris . . . This was the basis for the report that Kennedy was bringing to the President a peace plan offered by Hitler, via the Paris agencies. The rumor was supported by the fact that Kennedy refused to permit any porters to carry this package, and kept it at his side throughout the flight . . . As a matter of fact, Kennedy refused to permit any one else to handle that package because it contained precious, breakable matter—bottles of French perfume for his wife, the first perfume to leave Paris since the occupation.

LYONS

WILLIAM STONEMAN, the London correspondent for the Chicago News and New York Post, owns a pet turtle named Oscar. Oscar lived through the bombardment of the house in which Stoneman had his quarters. Last week, when the newspaperman was ready to return to America, he placed Oscar in his pocket and flew to Lisbon. He purchased a basket of fruit to take aboard the Clipper, and hid the turtle in it, under the apples and grapes, which rose suspiciously every time Oscar turned over . . . That turtle made the flight successfully and now is in New York. The custom men made no objection to its entry here, especially since Ambassador Kennedy registered his approval.

THE BIGGEST STORY of the week concerns evidence unearthed by the Senate's wire-tapping committee. It will involve a private wire-tapper who once worked for Dewey's office and who—on behalf of other clients whose names are known throughout the country—tapped the wires of eight members of the United States Supreme Court . . . Ernest Hemingway will get $150,000 for the movie rights to "For Whom the Bell Tolls." The deal was for $100,000 cash, plus 10 cents for every copy of the book sold—but the total ceiling price mentioned in the contract was $150,000 . . . Frank Sullivan, who is pro-Roosevelt, has become uneasy about the results. He suggests that, instead of tinkering with Thanksgiving, the President should move up election day one week.

HERBERT BAYARD SWOPE, in discussing radio technique, told one of his friends that the President keeps his face almost 2 feet away from the microphone when he broadcasts. The friend disagreed and insisted that the distance was only 6 inches . . . And so, as in all Swope arguments, the bets were made—Swope wagering that the distance was between 18 inches and 2 feet; his friend, that the distance was between 6 inches and 1 foot . . . Swope wrote to the President—who replied that, when he broadcasts his face is 18 inches away from the microphone.

PRINCE SERGE OBOLENSKY met Marion Mill-Preminger, and they began lamenting the inaccuracies of the gossip columnists . . . "Some of the things they say are terrible," said Obolensky . . . "Yes, terrible," agreed Mrs. Preminger, sympathetically . . . "They just go ahead and make up items which are unfounded" . . . "Yes," agreed Obolensky, "completely unfounded. Imagine saying that about your Otto" . . . "About my Otto?" gasped Mrs. Preminger. "What about him?" . . . Prince Obolensky sent for a paper and pointed to the column which mentioned that her husband would marry Zorina" . . . "I said those things about columnists," Mrs. Preminger then told Obolensky, "because I read only what they said about your marriage" . . . "My marriage?" gasped Obolensky. "Where?" . . . Marion sent for another paper, to point to another column which mentioned the Prince's forthcoming marriage to Mrs. David Bruce.

Columbia

That long, gruelling trek of the Mormons from Illinois to the present site of Salt Lake City, Utah, is being reenacted, beginning this morning, on the screen at Lowe's Columbia Theater.

Primarily a biography of the figure from whom it derives its name and a history of the early days of the Mormon church, the Twentieth Century-Fox production of "Brigham Young" also takes on many of the aspects of a thrilling "Western." Its story is initiated by scenes of tempestuous action, persecution, pillage, arson and murder. In fact, the high point of excitement is registered in the earliest sequences of the film. From that point on, the narrative becomes a little more placid, but still is grimly expository of the hardships entailed by a transcontinental wagon journey that marked one of the most amazing migrations in American history.

As has been pointed out here before, "Brigham Young," in its later sequences, is akin to "The Oregon Trail" in the heroic proportions of its undertaking and the bitter sacrifices involved. Its starkness, however, is to some extent ameliorated by the vein of romance with which the story is threaded. The furtherance of this element of the tale is the factor which, more than any other, diminishes the speed of the more melodramatic developments. These bob up again in the closing periods of the drama, when "The Good Earth" is brought back to mind by the plague of locusts that harasses weary pilgrims and all but persuades their leader that he has not been appointed by God to guide his flock.

Many notable names appear in the cast of "Brigham Young." Dean Jagger assumes the title role, with Brian Donlevy as his chief menace, and Vincent Price is seen in the early part of Joseph Smith, founder of the Mormon faith. The romantic roles are played by Tyrone Power and Linda Darnell, with Jane Darwell, John Carradine, Mary Astor, Willard Robertson, Fuzzy Knight, Ann Todd and Moroni Olsen among those who lend the principals most notable support.

The new bill at the Columbia is augmented by the usual short-reel subjects and picturized news events.

Guilfoyle Rewarded

As a reward for his clever work in "The Saint Takes Over," Paul Guilfoyle won a featured role with Fay Wray and Charles Lang in the studio's new offering, "Wildcat Bus." Frank Woodruff directed the Cliff Reid production.

The Eyes Have It

HELEN O'CONNELL, a piquant young artiste, featured with Jimmy Dorsey and His Orchestra, headlining the stage bill at the Earle.

'Bait Back' Angler Luck for Groucho

Groucho Marx is going to take his daughter, Miriam, into the high Sierras on a fishing trip. They plan to leave the first of the week for Lake Tahoe and pack in from there.

"It isn't Miriam's first fishing trip, but it will be the first where she won't catch any fish," Groucho says. "I jinx the whole family when I go fishing. But, it will be fun. We'll spend about six hours every day on a horse and the remainder of the time standing up in a stream just holding the pole. Everyone else will be catching fish, but I never do; I always feel lucky if I get my bait back at the end of the day."

Little

Following its custom of breaking records wherever it plays, "The Baker's Wife" yesterday began its third week at the Little Theater, smashing the attendance mark previously set by "Ballerina."

If, by some chance, there is some filmgoer too encompassed about with bullets and ballots to have heard much of this importation from an earlier France, let him know that this is the story of what happened in a small village when the wife of the baker ran off with an attractive shepherd. That's all there is to it, really, except that in their shrewd fashion Jean Giono, who wrote the story, and Marcel Pagnol, who adapted it to the screen, have viewed the result realistically instead of morally.

So, instead of finding their fellow citizens surprised, upset or even shocked by such a lapse from the marital code, Giono and Pagnol depict them as being inconvenienced, hence upset by the condition into which his loss drives their valuable baker. There is no bread in that French town.

That there is a mordant contrast to what has happened in France in this film must be bitterly clear to anyone who has seen it. The internal bickering, the bigotry, the empty condescension of those who should know better are as pointed in this fable as they have been in recent fact.

But there is a rich earthy humor in "The Baker's Wife" aside from this telling analogy. With Raimu in the central role and with sharp subtitles by John Erskine, "The Baker's Wife" remains a "must" for every intelligent filmgoer.

Court Manor Dispersal Sale Nets $225,325

Walter Chrysler, Jr., Buys 10 Head For $36,300; Mare Brings High Price

By Anne Hagner

New Market, Va., Oct. 30.—Easily outstripping the Saratoga yearling sales and anything of its kind ever seen in Virginia, the Court Manor dispersal of 102 of Willis Sharpe Kilmer's racing stock here today totaled $225,325 as thoroughbred fanciers from all over the Nation watched and bidded with equal enthusiasm.

Although Walter P. Chrysler, jr., paid out $36,000 for a variety of weanlings and broodmares to put other bidders in the shade, David M. Rust, of Leesburg, Va., stole the spotlight from the young New York sportsman by paying the day's highest individual price, $19,500, for the gray imported stallion, Gino. He will stand at Rust's Rockridge Farm for a $500 stud fee.

Prices for the six Court Manor stallions were, on the whole, disappointing, although Old Dominion fans drew some satisfaction from the fact that all but one of them remained in the State. The only one to travel afield is Neddie, who went to W. W. Vaughan, of New Jersey, for $5,500.

Mare Brings $16,500

Those who had expected the stallions to snag the upperbracket figures were amazed at the prices that went for broodmares and weanlings, many of them by Court Manor's renowned Sun Briar and Sun Beau. Top bid for a mare was paid by E. F. Woodward's Valdina Farm, of Uvalde, Tex., for Sun Celerina, who was knocked down for $16,500. The lovely, dark chestnut 6-year-old, with a good racing record of her own, is now in foal to Gino.

Valdina's total output of $34,000 meant that an excellent collection of broodmares will be added to the 200 already owned by Woodward. Another big buyer was Charles S. Howard, whose Seabiscuit topped Court Manor's Sun Beau for the title of "the world's biggest money winner." Howard's acquisitions will be sent to California to be bred to the 'Biscuit.

Woodward's bidding activities also included a $5,500 investment in a weanling colt, by Sun Briar out of another Valdina purchase, imported Rivalry, who cost the Texas breeder $3,000.

Among the fillies, J. S. Phipps, of Warrenton, took a likely-looking weanling daughter of Sun Briar for $5,600, after a spirited session of bidding against Chrysler.

Two thousand horse fanciers gathered at the picturesque 1,200-acre farm, to watch Fasig-Tipton auctioneers create a super-Saratoga atmosphere in the heart of the Shenandoah Valley. Action was definitely of the subtle variety, as prospective buyers indicated their intentions by the flicker of an eyelid or the raise of a finger.

Many Turf Notables Present

Nearly every prominent racing stable in the country was represented, including those of Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloan's Brookmeade Farm, from Upperville; F. Wallace Armstrong, of New Jersey; the Cromwell Bloodstock Agency, of Lexington, Ky.; E. Dale Shaffer's Coldstream Stud, also from Kentucky; Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, who occupied a prominent spot in the front row but resisted any impulse to bid; G. A. Bryson, of Maryland, and innumerable other prominent folk.

Fasig-Tipton heads were delighted to note that the average of well over $2,000 was far in excess of the Saratoga figure last August. It also topped the Old Dominion's favorite topic of discussion since last fall, the Audley Farm dispersal, where 133 horses totaled $209,000.

Aside from Gino and the unprecedentedly valuable broodmares, primary interest was centered on Court Manor's famed twosome, Exterminator and Sun Briar, both now on the retired list. Exterminator was led out of his stall time after time with his tiny pony mascot, Peanuts, and Sun Briar was likewise much sought after, along with Sun Beau.

Pirates' DiMaggio, Cub Rookie in Draft

Los Angeles, Oct. 30 (AP).—Two baseball players, Vince Di Maggio, of the Pittsburgh Pirates, and Louie ($50,000) Stringer, who may sparkle in the Chicago Cub infield next season, led a group of southern California athletes whose numbers were drawn in the draft.

Di Maggio, brother of Joe, lives at nearby Hermosa Beach. He is fortieth on call in his district, while Stringer, who has been with the Los Angeles Angels two years, is forty-ninth.

Challedon, Can't Wait Two Starters

Exterminator 'Cap Also on Program Tomorrow; Futurity Listed Saturday

Special Dispatch to The Post

Pimlico, Baltimore, Md., Oct. 30.—Tomorrow is an off-day on the Maryland turf calendar but it will be the calm before the storm as far as racing fans are concerned for Friday will bring the Pimlico Special and the Exterminator Handicap to the local plant of the Maryland Jockey Club to start a stake-studded meeting at the Hilltop plant.

Despite the fact that the Special has been whittled down to two starters, W. L. Brann's great Challedon and Myron Selznick's ambitious Can't Wait, interest is high in the race and upward of 25,000 are expected to watch the action. On Saturday, Pimlico will swing right back into high with the annual running of the Pimlico Futurity slated to bring a meeting of Our Boots and Whirlaway.

Today was one of ease for Challedon and Can't Wait. The latter was on the oval to get the feel of the track and jogged two miles while the Brann star did little more than look at the course. Although the track was sloppy this morning, it is the quickest drying oval in the East and officials are confident that, barring more rain, it will be fast for the Special.

Offer $30,000 in Money

In two days, Pimlico will offer $30,000 in added money. The Special is a $10,000 added, winner take all race; $5,000 goes with the Exterminator and $15,000 is tacked onto the Futurity. Two other $10,000 races are on the program for the meeting, the Riggs Handicap on next Tuesday and the Bowie Handicap on November 15, closing day of the meeting. Races ranging from $7,500 to $2,500 are on the other programs.

The Special is the fourth annual battle. War Admiral won the first running in 1937 when he defeated Masked General, War Minstrel and Bottle Cap. The 1938 race was that memorable clash in which Seabiscuit asserted his superiority over War Admiral. Last year, Challedon came again in the streich to defeat Kayak II by a half-length with Cravat far up the track.

The absence of C. S. Howard's Mioland is a keen disappointment to Pimlico officials and fans. Mioland has been coming along with leaps and bounds and would have been Howard's third representative in the Special series. The West Coast stable, however, declined the invitation.

Both Carry 126 Pounds

Challedon and Can't Wait, at weight for age, will meet at 126 pounds for the test over the mile and three-sixteenth route where Challedon earned his Preakness triumph. Can't Wait has shown much improvement and was a belated invitee to the race. His handlers are confident that he will make Challedon step.

In addition to putting up the $10,000 purse for the Special, the Maryland Jockey Club is donating the profits from the race to the British relief fund. Jockey Alfred Robertson, who will ride Can't Wait, has promised to donate his fees, if any, to the same cause.

Minnesota Picked Over Northwestern

Williamson System Favors Gophers in Week's Leading Attraction; Clemson Choice Over Tulane; Wake Forest Over G. W.

By Paul B. Williamson

The Golden Gophers of Minnesota, with a reputation for winning the tough ones, are the Williamson system's choice to topple Lynn Waldorf's Northwestern Wildcats at Evanston, Ill., Saturday in the biggest college football game of the season to date. Minnesota is accorded an edge of 98.3 to 96.6.

Down in the Southland, Clemson's Tigers take a record of 13 straight victories against Tulane at New Orleans. The Tigers must get over this one and also Auburn to be a "bowl" candidate. Tulane has come back strong after its 27-7 shellacking by Boston College, but Clemson is the pick by a touchdown or so.

The Mustangs of Southern Methodist are the system's selection to knock over Texas. This will be S. M. U.'s first conference test of the season and may indicate the wisdom of this forecaster's preseason appraisal of the Mustangs as strong title contenders.

Nebraska, ripe from a triumph over Missouri, meets another "blood" foe in the Oklahoma Sooners at Norman, Okla.; and should win.

Duke to Stop Ga. Tech

Among the other close big games scheduled this week-end, the system picks Duke over Georgia Tech, not forgetting that Duke barely skimmed by 7-6 last year; Penn over Navy, and it won't be a breeze; Georgetown over Syracuse, which will show if Georgetown is really big-time; Tennessee over L. S. U., although the Bayou Tigers say they're not scared.

And here's the joker of the week! St. Vincent's College, at Latrobe, Pa., has been considered small-time. Sunday the Bearcats play Catholic University, a sometime big-time team. This season, however, the Williamson System gives the nod to St. Vincent's. Another unusual prediction is Brown to beat Yale.

Some more of the important games to watch: Oregon State over California, Carnegie Tech over Cincinnati, Colorado to get by Utah in its championship drive; Oklahoma A. and M. over Creighton in a close one; Tulsa over Detroit in a very, very close one; Duquesne over Marquette, both with the same rating of 86.6; Fordham over North Carolina, unless "Sweet Jim" Lalanne and All-America" End Paul Severin run wild; Auburn over Georgia, in the oldest series in the South.

It's Iowa over Purdue, and Alabama over Kentucky by a nose. Wake Forest gets the nod to down George Washington, and San Jose

Grand Jury Indicts Seven In Race 'Fixing'

By the United Press

Los Angeles, Oct. 30.—The grand jury today indicted seven men on charges of "fixing" horse races at California tracks which cost movie actors and other racing fans thousands of dollars.

Bernard Mooney, alleged gambler, and Sol Greenberg, former jockey's agent, and five "John Does," all at large, were named in the indictments.

Mooney and Greenberg have been sought since Saturday when jockeys told the State racing board that the pair arranged payoffs of $100 to $200 per race to hold back heavily favored horses. The youths did so by kicking, pulling, or otherwise mishandling their mounts.

The indictment charges one count of conspiracy to commit grand theft, petty theft and to cheat and defraud "divers persons of money by criminal means," and to contribute to juvenile delinquency. There also were four individual counts of contributing to juvenile delinquency.

Involved in the delinquency charges are four jockeys, all 19, who went before the grand jury.

Bail for each indicted person was set at $3,000 by Superior Judge Frank G. Swain.

Bill Kern to Rely On His Veterans

Morgantown, W. Va., Oct. 30 (AP).—Coach Bill Kern said tonight he would rely on veteran members of the West Virginia University team in the twenty-seventh meeting with Washington and Lee Saturday at Charleston.

John Shonk, a Charleston boy, was named to captain the team, which will include him and Lellace at ends, Pike and Goodman at tackles, Rockis and Buttam, guards; Mandich at center, Seabright, Ellis, McCann and Carlin in the backfield.

Capital Club to Regain Former Name of Bannockburn

Club, Course Improvements to Be Included In Reorganization Plans of Near Future

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Roy K. Aten, president of Capital Golf and Country Club, announced last night the club would undergo a financial reorganization, starting immediately. When the court gives permission in approximately a month's time, it will again be known as Bannockburn Golf and Country Club.

The club will remain strictly private and will retain its present personnel, including Professional Tony Sylvester.

One of the most famous clubs in the District's history, the Glen Echo organization lost the name "Bannockburn" in January, 1937, and it was renamed Capital Golf Club. At the time only 19 dues-paying members were remaining of the original organization.

The club, semipublic since 1932, was put on the private list in April, 1939, and John J. Skinners, jr., of Philadelphia, has been so impressed by the work of Aten and his committees he decided to make an additional investment in the property that will include countless improvements to the course, clubhouse and general facilities.

Skinners will speak at the general meeting, scheduled Saturday, November 23, at the clubhouse. New officers will be elected from the floor at the time, while the owner will control the board of governors.

Course alterations to be put in play by next year include all new grass tees, three new greens immediately, with more to come, and a new fertilization process that will take about a year to restore the fairways to the former condition.

President Aten's statement said: "The purpose of the reorganization is to improve the financial management so as to permit extensive repairs and improvements, to be made to the golf course and club house, and also at the same time to give the active members of the club a larger voice in the conduct of its affairs."

There will be no material changes

Joe Louis Says He's Ready To Join Army

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Oct. 30.—Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis, wearing a tan overcoat about the color of Army khaki, said today he was ready to trade it for the uniform of a private or "whatever they want me to be that's best for the United States."

When he arrived here from Pittsburgh, Louis was informed he had drawn order No. 2611 in the draft lottery. His first comment was, "I wonder what number Max Baer drew."

Bear is scheduled to be one of Louis' future ring opponents.

The Negro fighter was asked if he would prefer to be a physical instructor or teach boxing to Army recruits, but he replied, "Whatever they think best. I want to do what would help the country most."

He said he had no reason to seek exemption and was ready to serve as soon as he was called.

Discussing his boxing plans, Louis said his tentative program called for bouts with Tommy Farr in December, "If they can bring him over from England in time," Lou Nova in February, Billy Conn in June and Baer next September.

Louis will make a political speech at a mass meeting tonight in behalf of Wendell Willkie, the Republican presidential nominee.

Bradley in Huddle With Judge Landis; Pilot Talk Revived

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 30.—Alva Bradley, president of the managerless Cleveland Indians, started plenty of conjecture today when he conferred with Baseball Commissioner K. M. Landis.

The meeting started speculation that the Cleveland boss might be seeking suggestions in connection with a successor for Oscar Vitt, whose contract was not renewed Monday at a session of the Cleveland directors.

Landis, however, termed the meeting "just a visit."

Bradley also was reported to have seen William Harridge, president of the American League, but neither Harridge nor Bradley were available for comment.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Somewhere in his lasting repose, Anthony Eden's great-great-grandfather is bally well wondering, no doubt, what has come over the blarsted world, but he would applaud at least one development. The ancestor of England's current War Minister would look with favor on the 4-year-old Pimlico Special race scheduled tomorrow.

POVICH

Sir Robert Eden was the last colonial governor of Maryland appointed by the crown but he was also a member and founding father of the Pimlico Jockey Club. Pimlico never has divorced itself completely from its British turf traditions and tomorow the track's profits on the betting of the Special will be turned over to the British War Relief Fund.

At Pimlico tomorrow they'll be staging a racing program after the heart of the late Sir Robert. Not only will it be a match race between Challedon and Can't Wait in the Special, but it will launch also the Exterminator Stakes at two miles and seventy yards. It's a throw-back to the distance races of the colonial era when a hide that couldn't run three miles without flattening out was a pretty dismal piece of horseflesh.

The Special is, in a sense, America's finest sporting race, although the track's founders are probably whirling in their mausoleums at the idea of a mere mile and three-sixteenths contest. But the Special harks back, nevertheless, to the era when gentlemen were willing to race their horses for the glory of victory and when such items as second money did not exist.

There will be no second money for the loser when Mr. W. L. Brann's Challedon and Myron Selznick's Can't Wait travel the track tomorrow. The stake is $10,000, and it's winner take all. It is tantamount to a $10,000 side bet by the two owners. They have come up to this race with the two best horses in the land and they're willing to settle the issue in a match race.

Both owners may be making a financial sacrifice. Up at New York on Saturday the $20,000 Westchester is being run and it represents a purse twice as large as Pimlico is offering. That is why Mioland, one of the original invitees of the Special, withdrew from the Pimlico race, and the same goes for Hash, another that was invited. With Challedon and Can't Wait preoccupied in Maryland, the owners of the other pair are shooting for the $20,000 Westchester. They want no truck with Challedon and Can't Wait. Mr. Brann and Mr. Selznick prefer to see their horse run against the best and to heck with the bigger purse.

Tomorrow's race has been made by Can't Wait. Challedon, Maryland-bred champion of last year and the stand-out horse of this season, was always a natural for the Special. But until Can't Wait came along, Challedon's opposition was dubious. So was Can't Wait, for that matter, until last Saturday at Laurel when he won the Washington Handicap from True Call. Pimlico officials were grateful for that. Can't Wait saved the Special from being a one-horse race.

Pimlico, operated by Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and other officials who do not count the breadline among their worries, is serious about restoring the distance race to American racing. For this meeting they have scheduled three races of more than two miles, including tomorrow's Exterminator Stakes. They count the sprint race as the great tragedy of the American turf and bemoan the fact that the average horse cannot win at more than a mile.

More than any other track, Pimlico is serious about the improvement of the breed, the gag that commercialistic promoters have used so often to gain legalized racing. Sprints of five and six furlongs and a mile contribute nothing to the improvement of the endurance and stamina sought in thoroughbreds but they dominate the cards because since the abandonment of distance racing precious few horses can go as far as a mile and a half and most would fall dead if asked to race two miles.

It is axiomatic on the turf that sprinters never beget good horses—only the horses that could go a distance do. Blood lines of sprinters thin out rapidly because the mania for speed burns a horse out. There is an analogy in humans. Paavo Nurmi, who could run any distance from a mile to the marathon, far outlived Charley Paddock or any other sprinter as a top notch performer.

Challedon is a son of Challenger II, the English horse which was bred for distance and his success on the American turf is no surprise. Who are the most prolific sires of the best American horses? The horses that could go the distance—Man o' War, Gallant Fox, Sun Briar, Sun Beau, Fair Play. Who gave the immortal Seabiscuit to the turf? Hard Tack, a son of Man o' War.

You never heard of a great sprinter siring a great horse and they rarely sire even good sprinters. The Wise Counselor strain, the Ultimate and Balko strains—all of it sprinting blood—never begot a great horse despite the sprinting fame of those sires. There isn't much place for a sprinter in horse's heaven, and that's the way Pimlico feels about it.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

Summit, N. J., Oct. 30.—Happy-go-lucky, hell-raising Ken Overlin, the former gob who won one of the better middleweight championships after fighting 13 years in what he calls "this lousy racket," was bandaging his hands before his final workout for his fight against Steve Belloise.

CONSIDINE

"I smell my opponents fists before I fight them," he said.

Somebody in the little dressing room said, "Howzat?"

"Yeah," the good looking, intelligent fighter said. "I'm always on the lookout for plaster of Paris. It has an odor I can detect all the way through a boxing glove."

We asked him how he became so full of knowledge about plaster of Paris.

"I've used it on my fists," he said, gaily. "When I was fighting in Australia that time I was alone. See? Chris Dundee stayed in this country, so I was my own manager. Well, the night of my first fight—it was against Fred Henneberry—I began to wonder what kind of protection I was going to get. You know, I wanted to be sure he wasn't doing anything to his hands. So I went around to his dressing room, knocked on the door and gave it that personality boy stuff. I said, 'hello, Fred, just thought I'd drop in to watch you wrap your hands. I'll wrap mine in here, too, so you can watch me.'

"Henneberry gave me a scowl and said 'get the blankety bloocy out of here. Nobody's going to watch me bandage my dukes.' Well, so I went to the promoter and asked him how come, and he said not to worry. That the wrappings of each fighter would be investigated after the fight. How do you like that, after the fight? Lots of good that would do me, after I got hit with one of those rocks.

"Fortunately he didn't hit me, except once. And that one punch opened my eye. So the next time I fought down there I got me some plaster. I'd sprinkle it on there and then pour water on it just before I'd go in the ring. Sometimes it was too soft. Never could get that stuff just right. But I can spot it as far as I can smell. I've got good handlers . . . Chris and Izzy Klein and fellows like that. But I never trust their sense of smell. I've got to have a whiff of that guy's fists myself."

Ken said he had never used a gimmick. "But I'm always looking for one. Chris always puts his hands into the other fellow's gloves first. You know, the other fellow's manager usually puts his duke in the gloves, to loosen them up a little. But Chris always gets in there last, just before the fighter puts on the mittens. Looking for stray bolts. I've seen some real gimmick jobs, brother."

"The name of the fighter doesn't matter, but I saw a good prospect get knocked out one night by a bum who couldn't carry his mouthpiece. The bum's manager stuck a small piece of pipe in his glove just before the bum put it on. It was so big that it bulged out the sides of the glove, like a couple of goitres. Anyway, the fight starts and the bum grapples with this good boy and while they're in their huddle the bum say, 'Hey, ain't that Mae West settin' at the ringside?' The boy takes one quick look—and boffo he's out. Yep, it's lousy racket. But you get a lot of laughs."

Indians Swamp Ramblers, 4 to 0

Philadelphia, Oct. (AP).—Eddie Shore's Springfield Indians opened their American Hockey League season tonight by trouncing the Philadelphia Ramblers, 4-0, before a crowd of 4,000.

Holding the upper hand almost throughout, the Indians poked in two goals in the second period and two in the third. Fred Hunt scored 3 of the Indian's 4 points, one in the second period and both third-period counters. Auggie Herschenratter rapped in the first tally.

Boston Players Receive $152.04

Chicago, Oct. 30 (AP).—Baseball Commissioner K. M. Landis notified 31 members of the Boston American League Baseball Club today they will receive $152.04 as their share of the World Series melon for finishing in a fourth-place tie with the Chicago White Sox in the American League pennant race.

Twenty-nine White Sox players will receive $160.48, Landis said.

He said 31 members of the Pittsburgh Club were notified they will receive $301.89 as their share

Scrubs Use Wake Forest Passing Attack Against Colonials

Varsity Has Tough Time With Aerials

G. W. Only 'Fairly Successful' Halting Deacon Plays; Clash Here Tomorrow Nigh

Unless Coach Bill Reinhart's aerial defense clicks better tomorrow night than it did yesterday against scrubs employing Wake Forest's passing attack, George Washington's Colonials are in for rough weather tomorrow night when they entertain the Deacons under the lights of Griffith Stadium.

The G. W. coach staged a 45-minute session on pass defense yesterday, and the regulars were only fairly successful in stopping the make-believe Wake Forest eleven, as played by the scrubs.

Some indication that tomorrow night's battle will be a high-scoring duel, however, was given when the varsity went on offense and began working on their aerial attack.

With Tom Grady, Eddie Wilamoski and Scott Gudmundson on the hurling end, the Colonial regulars had things their own way.

The lads G. W. will have to watch, known as the "Terrible Trio," are Tony Gallovich, John Polanski and Red Mayberry.

Gallovich Leads Pack

This threesome with the tongue-twisting names is led by Gallovich, who passes, runs, kicks and does everything on the gridiron but whip up a Spanish omlet. He has scored six touchdowns and kicked five extra points for a total of 41. Polanski has piled up five touchdowns and was the leading scorer in Eastern and Southern football last season.

Hampered by injuries all season, Mayberry will be in top shape for George Washington. Incidentally, he was ranked a mere fifth in collegiate football last year, placing behind such lads as Tom Harmon, Harold Van Every, Nile Kinnick and Banks McFadden.

In six games this season the Deacons have piled up 140 points to 81 for their opponents. They knocked over North Carolina, 12 to 0, and lost only to Duke and Clemson, the latter a 39-to-0 rout. They routed William and Jewell, 79 to 0, beat Furman, 19 to 0, and Marshall, 19 to 0.

Reinhart scouted the Deacons in their 33-to-0 loss to Duke and he is confident that if George Washington plays the way they played last week against West Virginia they have a good chance of winning. The Colonials will go into the game as the underdog.

Batson in Uniform

Walter Fedora and Wilamoski comprise the ground-gaining combination and the Colonials' new-found passing attack will be called on quite often.

Ken Batson, injured in the West Virginia game, was back in uniform yesterday and went through a light drill. Sam Babich, only other casualty, definitely will miss the game. He was released from the hospital yesterday.

Line Coach Gene Shields said his linemen were in top mental form for the battle. The drill was so spirited yesterday that Stanley Ziobro, guard, received a bloody nose.

Coach Solem Regains Star For Hoya Tilt

By the Associated Press

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 30.—Tommy Maines, the highly touted sophomore who was injured in Syracuse's opening game and has seen little service since, got back into the Orange's regular backfield as Coach Ossie Solem worked his squad for the game with Georgetown. However, Maimes went to halfback instead of his original fullback post and teamed with Gerry Courtney, Leo Canale and Ed Rodiek.

HOWARD

Cambridge, Mass.—Chuck Spreyer returned to his old post at left halfback for Harvard today as the Crimson went through a long dummy scrimmage against the scrubs in preparation for Princeton.

Coach Dick Harlow also had several players practicing place kicks. Failure to convert points after touchdowns cost Harvard a tie with Army and a defeat by Dartmouth.

YALE

New Haven, Conn.—Coach Ducky Pond directed his Yale gridders through a long scrimmage in the rain substituting players frequently, as the Elis drilled for their game with Brown. Bob Brooks regained the first string tackle position he apparently had lost to Jerry Knapp.

COLUMBIA

New York—Coach Lou Little sent his Columbia Lions through a two-hour work-out in the rain in preparation for the contest with Cornell. Most of the time was devoted to defense with Assistant Coaches Gip Battles and Gerry Seidel augmenting the reserves in demonstrating the Big Reds' attack. Attention also was given to punting with a slippery ball.

FORDHAM

New York—The Fordham Rams were kept indoors by Coach Jim Crowley and the varsity sat on the sidelines as reserves ran through North Carolina formations on the gymnasium floor.

BOSTON COLLEGE

Newton, Mass.—Boston College's first two teams scrimmaged against freshman combinations today and Coach Frank Leahy scheduled similar contact work for tomorrow and the next day, both school holidays, as the Eagles prepared for the invasion of Manhattan Saturday.

U. OF KANSAS

Lawrence, Kans.—The Kansas football squad held its final work-out before entraining tomorrow afternoon for Philadelphia and a game with Villanova. Halfback Chuck Wenstrand was shifted to right end.

Pop Warner Salutes Success of Shaughnessy at Stanford In Proving to Coast Hand Is Quicker Than the Eye

Clark Shaughnessy (right), Stanford coach who is pulling the wool over the eyes of Pacific Coast football, does a few tricks for Glenn S. (Pop) Warner (left), the original "Houdini" of the gridiron. Pop paid high tribute yesterday to Shaughnessy's "hand is quicker than the eye" policy at Stanford

3 Regulars Take It Easy At Notre Dame

Osterman, Piepul, Lillis All Miss Long Practice Session

By the Associated Press

South Bend, Ind., Oct. 30.—Notre Dame's all-victorious football squad ran into more trouble today when Bob Osterman, center, and Paul Lillis, right tackle, showed up with injuries which kept them out of the long practice session.

Lillis has leg inuries and Osterman a bruised knee. Trainers said Osterman might not be able to play against Army Saturday but Lillis is expected to be ready for the trip East. Capt. Milt Piepul, hurt in the Illinois game, was in uniform but did not participate in the heavy part of the workout.

PURDUE

Lafayette, Ind.—Two teams which are expected to bear the brunt of the work for Purdue in Saturday's football game against Iowa drilled long and hard today on a defense designed to stop the versatile Hawkeye attack.

Hope was virtually abandoned that the injured Mike Byelene might be able to play Saturday when he was able to go through only a light jogging practice. Sophomores Tony Berto and Paul Anderson are expected to share his assignment again as they did against Wisconsin last week.

INDIANA

Bloomington, Ind.—Development of a potent goal line offense, something the team has lacked at times this year, was the No. 1 item on Indiana University's football practice session today.

Coach Bo McMillin sent the Hoosiers through a long drill in an effort to perfect a scoring punch. Tuffy Brooks, who missed the Northwestern game because of injuries, was shifted today from quarterback to right halfback and McMillin indicated Brooks would see some action against Ohio State Saturday.

OKLAHOMA

Norman, Okla.—"We'll be ready for Nebraska, all right, "Coach Tom Stidham commented today after putting Oklahoma's Sooners through a tapering-off drill.

"The Sooners are really keyed high," he said as he took time to praise a good showing by Tom Rousey, who as a sub for Orville Mathews may give the Sooner backfield an extra punch.

MISSOURI

Columbia, Mo.—Pitchin' Paul Christman's precision passes, which defeated New York University last fall, came in for considerable attention today as the Missouri Tigers drilled for the Violet's visit.

Blocking and tackling also was emphasized. Center Don Duchek, who twisted an ankle yesterday, was the only absentee.

KANSAS STATE

Manhattan, Kans.—Coach Hobbs Adams and his crippled Kansas State football squad leave tomorrow for the Michigan State game.

Halfback Chris Langvardt will make the trip despite a bruised arm but Dick Rodgers, another halfback who dislocated his shoulder yesterday, will remain at home.

The freshmen seemed unaware of a Kansas State pass defense as they completed numerous aerials all around the Varsity backs today.

Hidden-Ball Inventor Praises Use Of Deception and the 'T' Formation

By the Associated Press

Palo Alto, Calif., Oct. 30.—Glen Scobey (Pop) Warner, the original "Houdini" of the gridiron, gave an admiring salute today to the man who is proving to Pacific Coast football that the hand is quicker than the eye—Clark Shaughnessy of Stanford.

As an early day exponent of deception (his 1907 Carlisle Indians were hiding the football up the backs of their jerseys), Warner expressed profound admiration for the way Shaughnessy's team has out-slickered five opponents, the latest being Southern California.

"Shaughnessy is entitled to the fullest credit for the phenomenal way he is making use of the 'T' formation," Warner said. "The formation is almost as old as football itself. We used it when I played at Cornell from 1892 to '94 and when I started coaching the next year at Iowa State and Georgia.

Offers No Solution

"The methods by which Shaughnessy gets so much deception from the formation is a tribute to his coaching strategy. He has given football out this way a tremendous lift. It is something new and a tonic for the game.

"His fellow coaches cannot but help admire it. And they will have to do something about it. Practically every team in the West, with the exception of Washington, has been using the same basic formation, the single wing, with occasional use of the short punt formation."

Warner, as a matter of professional courtesy, offered no possible solutions to the problem of "how to stop Shaughnessy."

The tribute to Shaughnessy, paid by the second oldest coach in the country, took on added significance in view of the fact the famed oldster himself coached at Stanford from 1924 to 1932, with outsanding success for the most part of his regime.

Track President Dies

St. Louis, Oct. 30 (AP).—Charles J. Cella, 65, wealthy St. Louis businessman and sportsman, died here last night. He was president of the Oak Lawn Race Track at Hot Springs Ark.

Eagles Beaten By Providence

Center Scores Goal in Last 12 Seconds

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 30 (AP).—Max Bentley, a Chicago Black Hawk farmhand playing his first professional game, scored with 12 seconds to play to give the Providence Reds a 2-1 decision over the New Haven Eagles in an American Hockey League contest tonight before 3,500 fans.

The young center grabbed the loose puck near the home club cage after a three-man rush had been halted, and quickly fired into the far side of the net with Goalie Phil Stein helpless to block the shot.

Both teams scored in the middle period, Babe Tapin connecting for the Reds at 15:12 and George Patterson tieing the score at 19:40.

Referee Ag Smith dished out seven penalties in the first stanza but the players took the hint and only three more were called during the contest.

Bob Feller No. 3585 In Uncle Sam's Pool

Cleveland, Oct. 30 (AP).—The Cleveland Indians today had little cause to worry over the loss of their ace pitcher, Bob Feller, through the draft. Feller, who registered here, was given the serial number 3585—the 7,486th to be drawn in the selective service lottery.

Barons Swamp Hershey, 8-4

Cleveland Wins American Opener

Cleveland, Oct. 30 (AP).—Unleashing a fast attack, the Cleveland Barons swamped the Hershey Bears, 8 to 4, in the opening game of the American Hockey League season here tonight.

Bill Summerhill, new Cleveland right wing, paced the Baron onslaught with three goals, and Bill MacKenzie, Cleveland captain, drilled in two. Gordon Bruce and Harry Frost got two apiece for the Bears.

The game became savage in the last few minutes, and Hershey had three men serving penalties as the game ended. Fred Robertson, Baron guard, and Howard Mackie got major penalties for fighting.

Army Eleven Holds Intense Drills for Irish

80,000 Fans Expected For Traditional Clash Saturday in New York

Special Dispatch to The Post

West Point, N. Y., Oct. 30.—Army's eleven started a week of intensive training yesterday for what may be the stiffest test of the season—Notre Dame, before almost 80,000 fans at New York City's Yankee Stadium this Saturday afternoon.

The Irish, undefeated and untied in four games and the cream of the Midwest along with Michigan, are top-heavy favorites in this twenty-seventh meeting between the teams. Army has not beaten Notre Dame on the gridiron since 1931, although they held the South Benders to a 6-6 tie in 1935.

West Point's main hope of a surprise victory rests in the probability that Johnny Hatch may be fit to play for the first time since the Cornell tussle two weeks ago. The lanky back who does most of Army's passing when he's in the game hurt his ankle and was kept on the sidelines against Harvard and Lafayette.

Army followers have long felt that with Hatch and Hank Mazur, another triple-threater, in the same backfield, the team might find new spark. Up to now, either one or the other has been on the bench with injuries.

Coach Bill Wood said he has not determined who will start against Notre Dame, and added he will probably not announce a line-up until kickoff time.

Joe Medwick Signs With Dodgers for Reported $20,000

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Oct. 30.—The Brooklyn Dodgers announced tonight that Outfielder Joe Medwick, a chronic holdout when he was with the St. Louis Cardinals, already had agreed to terms for 1941.

He settled with President Larry McPhail on a figure estimated at $20,000 the day after the season closed, it was revealed.

This was a sum Medwick reached only once at St. Louis—in 1938 after he had won the National League batting championship the previous season.

He accepted $18,000 last spring after a long holdout. His play for the Dodgers was not up to his former par, and Medwick told McPhail at the close of the campaign he would take whatever the club thought he was worth for next year and would report at training camp early.

MacPhail set a price, believed $20,000, and Medwick accepted.

3 D. C. College Elevens Go Away This Week

Georgetown Leaves Today for Syracuse Minus Al Kull, Star Back; C. U., A. U. Off Tomorrow for Latrobe, Pa., Ashland, Va.

Three of the District's college football teams will hop tarins for games away from home this week-end, with unbeaten Georgetown starting the exodus today when a squad of 36 entrains for Syracuse, N. Y., today at 5 p. m.

Catholic University goes to Latrobe, Pa., for a Sunday afternoon date with St. Vincent's, and American U. journeys to Ashland, Va., to meet Randolph-Macon. Maryland is idle this week-end.

At Georgetown, it was announced that Al Kull, triple-threat sophomore halfback will be among the missing. Kull sprained an ankle against New York University and will not be ready to play until a week from Saturday against Maryland.

Bill McLaughlin, soph fullback, who also turned an ankle in New York, will make the trip and is expected to play. Trainer Harry Crowley has been working on Kull's ankle all week, but he said it isn't in shape yet.

Lou Ghecas, the "Danbury Destroyer," yesterday was named to captain the Hoyas against Syracuse University Saturday afternoon.

It was Ghecas last year who brought the Hoyas out of a hole with a touchdown which, with Joe McFadden's extra point, tied Syracuse, 13 to 13. Coach Jack Hagerty expects his toughest game so far this year in Syracuse.

Long known as a spoiler of Georgetown footbal records, Syracuse defeated New York U., 47 to 13, while the Hoyas won by 26 points, 26 to 0. Syracuse just last week upset Columbia by a late field goal, 3 to 0.

The Hoyas worked over two hours yesterday on downfield blocking and and pass defense. After watching the varsity scrimmage against the freshmen armed with Syracuse plays, Hagerty said he expects one of the toughest battles in the past three years.

Pete Sachon Returns To Form for C. U.

Out at Catholic University yesterday, hopes for a successful second half of the season were considerably brightened by the return of "Pistol Pete" Sachon, C. U.'s triple threat candidate for all-American quarterback honors, to form.

Pete has been limping with a severely sprained ankle received last Saturday in the game with West Virginia Wesleyan, and yesterday when he tried out the member he sent a punt zooming some 70 yards through the air.

The Cardinals, who face St. Vincent's Sunday afternoon in Latrobe, Pa., for the first time, have a tough battle on their hands, and the return of Sachon will make things more simple. Two of the Cardinal linemen, Joe Carrig, regular end, while Tom Carrig, his brother, also will be on the sidelines. Both were injured last Saturday. The team leaves Union Station tomorrow night at 11:40 p. m. and arrives in Latrobe at 8:22 Saturday morning.

American U. Holds Drills for R.-M.

Coach Staff Cassell has been working all week at American University on the Eagles' offense, which operated at high speed between the 20-yard lines in tying Johns Hopkins, 0-0, but bogged down at the goallines.

The Eagles piled up 20 first downs to the Hopkins' 8, and Cassell is taking no chances on an encore in the game Saturday afternoon in Ashland, Va., against Randolph-Macon.

Eastern Strong Favorite Over Anacostia Eleven Tomorrow

Tech Meets Western in Series Also

Doctor's Report Awaited on Eslin, Injured Tide Player, Today

Much of Anacostia High's hopes of stealing into the East section interhigh championship picture will depend on a doctor's report today on Gillie Eslin, star halfback of Eastern High, which faces the Indians of Anacostia tomorrow.

His ankle fractured on the first play of the Tide's first game against Episcopal, Eslin has been unable to play since. The injured member was given a thorough examination yesterday and a final report is expected today.

Eastern, East section leader, will be highly favored for the game whether Eslin is able to play or not, but Anacostia's Coach Rolland Lund has confidently predicted an upset. It will be one of two crucial battles for Eastern division teams, Tech moving over to Georgetown to face the West section champs, Western. Though it might concievably win sectional honors despite a loss tomorrow, Tech will be going "all out" for a victory of its own and hoping for an Eastern loss.

All four teams went through strenuous drills yesterday, with very few injuries outstanding. Western's Jake Hilleary still hobbled on a banged-up angle, but his was the most serious damage.

Meanwhile Gonzaga held a special pep rally for its game with St. John's Saturday at Griffith Stadium, Coach Jack Hagerty, of Georgetown, was the principal speaker, and his star, Lou Ghecas, also attended. Redskin players on hand were Wayne Milner and Dick Todd. Bob O'Donnell, brother of last year's All-District Lane, was elected captain for the important Catholic high rivalry.

St. John's put off its big rally until today at 2 p. m. A bit of drama will start the special assembly after which the "pep" portion of the program will be staged.

Wright's 400 Bowling Count Tops Bankers

Al Wright of the American Security No. 1 quintet, was the standout of the Bankers League at Arcadia with a high set of 400, his third consecutive 400 set. Willcoxen, Bank of Washington, captured high individual game with 163. Wright's 400 set helped his quintet to team game of 610. The Riggs quintet took set with 1765.

WESTERN ELECTRIC

Lester, Telephone Sets, was too good for the other duckpinners in the Western Electric meet at Brookland Recreation. Robey rolled high game of 145 and went on to set honor with 380. The Coin Collectors collected team highs with 559 and 1598 to win all three games from opponents, as did Shop Office and Telephone Sets. The Stock Maintenance lads remain in front of the others.

LUMBER LEAGUE

J. Rogers, Langdon Mill & Lumber, and Lucchessi, of the same quintet, were the outstanding rollers in the Lumber and Millwork League at Convention Hall. The former took high individual game with 140 as his mate garnered set high count with 378, pacing their team to high counts of 605-1,683.

R. R. R. BOARD

Dorothy Whitcomb, Diplomats, and Sadie Glanz, Red Arrows, were the best bowlerettes on the Arcadia drives last night at the Railroad Retirement Board Ladies meet. Miss Whitcomb took high game with 114 while Miss Glanz had a nice set of 315, the latter pacing her Red Arrows to team highs of 453 and 1,327.

INTERIOR

Les Landrum, National Parks, was the star of the Interior Department's rolling last night at Penn Recreation with individual highs of 142-365 to boost his team to high counts of 599-1,702. Bill Dawson, Miscellaneous, had a 345. The Reclamation Rebels drubbed the Engineers in the odd game to go into first place in the league standing.

AUTOMOTIVE

In the Automotive League's rolling last night at the Ice Palace, Eddie Yates, H. B. Leary Bros., and Buck White, Pohanka, tied for high individual game with 155. John Anderson, Arcade Pontiac, took high set with 382 to lead his team to victory in team highs with 612-1,726. Arcade Pontiac leads the league with 19-2, with Emerson & Orme No. 1 following with 15-6.

Plans Brewing for Big Exodus of 'Skin Fans

Record Crowd Expected to Converge On New York for Dodger Game Nov. 10; Redskins Work on Defense for Pittsburgh

Plans for one of the biggest invasions of New York in Redskin fan history are underway, and from the looks of the situation it'll probably be a twin affair—the first on November 10, when the Skins meet the Brooklyn Dodgers, and the second on November 24, when they play the New York Giants.

Railroad officials confidently predict that the exodus of Redskin supporters will surpass the record-smashing group of 15,000 who followed the Redskins to New York to watch the playoff game for the Eastern Division championship last year.

Already, Brooklyn's Ebbetts Feld is almost a complete sellout.

200 Charter Train

Redskin fever has reached such a pitch with Government employes that a group of more than 200 already has reserved an entire section for the Dodger game and will operate their own special train.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is offering four different trips, the first leaving Friday night, a week from tomorrow, at 5 p. m. and returning Monday at 6 p. m., and the last leaving Washington on Saturday at 1:30 p. m. and returning Sunday at 6:30 p. m.

The Government employes special leaves Saturday on the B. & O. The train will consist of coaches, dining and tavern cars, and New York headquarters will be at the Hotel Piccadilly. John A. Lewis, District 3300, and H. P. Strople, Chestnut 2000, are in charge of the trip, staged by General Accounting Office, Lodge No. 8, American Federation of Government Employes.

Work for Steelers

Meanwhile, the Redskins staged a lengthy workout yesterday getting in readiness for the Pittsburgh Steelers game this Sunday at Griffith Stadium.

The Skins worked on their defense, in anticipation of a return engagement with Pittsburgh's Merlyn Condit, whose spinners into the middle of the line were constant ground gainers.

Andy Farkas is working out, taking it easy, but the chances of his being in top form for the Chicago Bears here November 17 looked brighter than ever. A crowd of 30,000 is expected to see the Redskins seek their seventh straight victory Sunday.

Lafayette, King Pin Win In D. C. League

Lafayette and King Pin scored shutout victories in the District Duckpin League last night to close in on the leading Lucky Strike team, a two-game loser to Brookland.

Elvin Shanks led the Brookland pinfall with a 151 game and 402 set while Dave Burrows led the losers with 134-370 as they salvaged one game out of the three.

Ernie Hauser's 148 game and 415 set paced Lafayette's 3-0 victory over Hyattsville, while Bill Miller's 398 was best for King Pin in the upset shutout over Ice Palace. Paul Jarman had 151-407 for the losers.

Rosslyn took two from Clarendon, Bill Krause pacing the defending champions with 147-392 while Clarendon produced two stars but won only one game, Cletus Pannell with 151-424 and Gene Hargett, 171, the night's biggest individual game.

Convention Hall, with Tony Santini's 394 showing the way, took the odd one from Georgetown, despite Pinky Bradt's 391, while Arcadia rolled a 1,873 team set in taking two out of three from Penn Recreation. Abe Weinberg had 400 for the Penns.

TEMPLE

New Deal men's shop registered high team game and set of 606 and 1,657, respectively, as the team won three from Kavakos Grill in the Temple Bowling League last night. I. C. E. also won three games from Jimmie's Restaurant.

Lennie Smith, of Camden Tavern, rolled high individual game and set of 155 and 365, respectively.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 30.—The hunting set of Albemarle and adjoining counties will turn out in force at the annual hunter trials of the Keswick Hunt Club, to be held tomorrow at Tall Oaks, home of Mrs. John M. Hopkins.

To the winner will go 60 per cent of the purse; 25 per cent to second place; 10 per cent to third place, and 5 per cent to fourth. Horses entered in this event must be owned and ridden by a member of a recognized hunt and must have been hunted at least six times during the 1939-40 season.

The events will be judged by Miss Louise Finch, of Monmouth County, N. J.; Robert Young, of Middleburg, and Horace Moffett, of Marshall, Fauquier County.

Among the entries from Mrs. Cary Jackson's Marletotz Farm will be Gay Blade, a gelding owned by Mrs. Austen Jennings, of Westport, Conn., reserve champion at the Keswick and Farmington horse shows; Prosaic, a 3-year-old gelding of much promise; Grayarno, a black gelding, winner at Madison Square Garden and other Northern shows, and John B. White, blue ribbon winner at the Orange Horse Show.

Eagle Coach Forms Lines

MacKenzie Names 2 of Three Squads

Two of the three lines which will represent the Washington Eagles in 1940-41 Eastern Amateur Hockey League competition have been selected by Coach Redvers Mackenzie.

Mackenzie yesterday relayed word that Norman Burns, six foot, 195-pound center with both Atlantic City and River Vale last season, will work the pivot on a line that otherwise will be comprised of Frank Mailley and Jack MacBeth, newly signed wingman.

Russ Rossignol, playing his first year with the Eagles, will play center on the line otherwise comprised of Mike German and Paul Courteau, two stand-out wingmen holding over from last season.

The Eagles tomorrow night are to open their exhibition season when they meet the Cornwall Players on the latter's ice outside Montreal.

Bill Ackerman On Hunting

ACKERMAN

Every section of the country has its outstanding families. In Kentucky, could one forget the Hatfields and McCoys, or the Carters of Virginia? In the sound country of northeastern North Carolina it is the Midgetts and it would be impossible to throw a stone without hitting one.

If the individuals are any criterian, it must be a grand clan. Certainly, the name Midgett is engraved deeply in the records of the deeds of men who patrol the North Carolina beaches and follow the sea.

But though the family is of great number, today our story is confined to two members, Neal Midgett and his missus, because they have to offer just what most of us are looking for these days—real duck and goose shooting with the facilities of one of the finest clubs in the Carolinas brought down to a daily shooting basis. It is most reasonable, too, considering that even a tyro shooting out of his blinds can hardly fail to take a limit bag.

Reservations should be made in advance by calling Virginia Beach I F 2. This is a Coast Guard extension down the Outer Banks, because it is a five-hour trip from here. Midgett's boat will meet you at Corolla to get across the sound to the Whalebone Club.

We hope this note will answer some of the many calls coming in for wildfowl shooting. It is a considerable distance, yes, but keep in mind there is little likelihood of good shooting close by for several weeks.

We have known hunters to forget their duck stamps. For that reason we offer this note to jog your memory now. Every one shooting wildfowl who is 16 year olds and over, must have a stamp costing one buck at any postoffice.

And, just in case you haven't kept up with the regulations, the season opens in the Southern States November 2 and runs until December 31 inclusive. Both Maryland and Virginia are included in this area, but don't forget that snow geese, brant, Ross' goose, swans and wood duck are not open to shooting in States bordering the Atlantic and the daily bag limit of ten ducks may not include more than three of any one or three in the aggregate of canvasbacks, redheads, bufflehead or ruddy ducks.

The hours of shooting this year are sunrise to 4 p. m., and only two days bag limit may be possessed at any time. Shotguns of three shell capacity may be used if of the automatic type, and not larger than 10-gauge. Sinkboxes are not allowed, and neither is baiting.

Tackles Set the Pace Among Star Linemen

Drahos, of Cornell, and Reinhard, Calif., Played Great Games Last Week; 4 Hoyas Mentioned Who Attracted Attention

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 30.—Smashing play by leading tackle candidates marked last week's performances by the Nation's potential All-America football linemen.

Setting a pace few of his rivals could match was big Nick Drahos, of Cornell, a member of the 1939 All-America. This 6-foot, 3-inch stalwart from Long Island played 60 minutes of brilliant football against Ohio State. He was a tower of strength on defense and offense all day and place-kicked the Big Red's three extra points.

On the other side of the continent another great tackle prospect was doing a spectacular 60-minute job—Bob Reinhard, of California, who likewise towers 6 feet 3 inches. Regarded by many Pacific Coast critics as that sector's finest lineman, Reinhard was a terror against Washington as the Golden Bears just missed scoring a tremendous upset. Reinhard, who does California's kicking, averaged 47.7 yards and outbooted Washington's highly rated Dean McAdams.

Wistert Outstanding

Four Western Conference tackles were standouts on Saturday. Al Wistert, Michigan sophomore, played hob with Penn's offense all day; Alf Bauman, of Northwestern, was an immovable object in a line otherwise outplayed by Indiana; Micke Enich, Iowa captain, played plenty of football against Minnesota, whose sophomore, Dick Wildung, also looked good.

Among the ends, the south, as usual, is producing a baner crop. Paul Severin, North Carolina's 1939 all-America, was up to his old tricks against Tulane, catching one touchdown pass and playing a fine all-around game otherwise. Two other fine Southern Conference wingmen—Joe Blalock, of Clemson, and Alex Urban, of South Carolina—waged a duel on the same field and some experts thought honors were about even. In the Southeastern Conference, Jim Lenoir, of Auburn; Bob Ison, of Georgia Tech, and Buddy Elrod, of Mississippi State, all looked good.

Warren Alfson and Ed Schwartzwopf, of Nebraska, caught the eye among the guards last week. Against Missouri, Nebraska's tackles dropped back into the secondary, leaving the guards up there to take the punishment. Missouri's record of 27 yards rushing is one sign of just how effective Alfson and Schwartzkopf were.

Opponents Co-starred

Among the centers, Frank (Bud) Finneran, of Cornell, and Claude White, of Ohio State, put on a great show at Ithaca. Each played the full 60 minutes. Finneran intercepted three passes, directed his blockers after each interception and got away for nice run-backs. One of these led to Cornell's third touchdown. White played so well that Cornell used Mort Lansberg, Speedy Fullback, only occasionally on spinners. Another fine Eastern center, Leon Gajecki of Penn State, played a bang-up game against Temple.

Among other linesmen who attracted attention last week were:

Ends—Anderson, Ohio State; Marx, Washington; Pillow, Louisiana State; Jett and Walvers, Wake Forest; Darnell, Duke; Jennings, Oklahoma; Harris, Indiana; Frutig, Michigan; Kopcik, Georgetown; Hickey, Arkansas; Roach, Texas Christian; Stinnett, Colorado State; Clark, Utah; Reeve, Brigham Young; Rankin, Purdue; Aguirre, St. Mary's; Barber, Columbia; MacKinney, Harvard.

Tackles—Stuart, Oregon; Barnes and Barrett, Louisiana State; Preston, Wake Forest; Dufour, Tulane; Kahler and Behm, Nebraska; Fronczek, Richmond; Blozis, Georgetown; Hartman, Rice; Pannell, Texas A. and M.; Bateman, Brigham Young; Spendlove, Utah; Hudson and Tonsing, St. Mary's; Levy, Columbia; Kuzman, Fordham.

Guards—Ardillo, Auburn; Dunbar and Conti, Cornell; Frankowski, Washington; Winterson and Karmazin, Duke; Givler, Wake Forest; Walker, Virginia Military; Embich, Wisconsin; Lokanc, Northwestern; Llo, Georgetown; Robnett, Texas A. and M.; Geary, Utah; Zubey, St. Mary's.

Centers—Sossman, South Carolina; Wright, Clemson; Matuza and Richey, Georgetown; Nelson, Baylor; Sheafe, St. Mary's; Snavely, Columbia; Feibish, New York University; De Fillipo, Fordham.

McFadden Leads League GroundGainers

Todd, Baugh Top Pros in Scoring, Passing, Respectively

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 30.—Four former All-America backs are showing the way in ground gaining in the National Football League, according to the statistics released today for the seventh week of play.

Banks McFadden, Brooklyn rookie from Clemson, moved back into first place with a record of 325 yards in 42 attempts, an average of 7.7 yards. Byron (Whizzer) White, ex-Colorado star and 1938 league ground-gaining champion, dropped back to second with 299 yards.

Parker Hall, Mississippi star with Cleveland, has picked up 290 yards for third place over Marshall Goldberg, former Pittsburgh great with the Chicago Cardinals, who has gained 247 yards.

Eastern division players also lead the race for other individual honors with Philadelphia's rookie Don Looney ahead in pass receiving, Sammy Baugh of Washington continuing his hot pace in forward passing and Dick Todd, also of Washington, topping the scorers.

Baugh has an aerial record of 61 completions in 88 tosses for 834 yards, an efficiency mark of 69 per cent. He has thrown eight touchdown passes. Although Davey O'Brien of Philadelphia still has the most completions with 67, his efficiency of 42 per cent dropped him to ninth, while New York's Eddie Miller moved into second place with 30 out of 56 for 53 per cent with his fine showing against the Chicago Bears.

Looney, with a record of 33 passes caught, is only one pass reception away from last year's final total of 34 made by Green Bay's Don Hutson. Hutson has caught 25.

Todd moved into the lead in scoring with 36 points, three more than Ward Cuff of the Giants. Bob Masterson, Washington, and Ace Parker, Brooklyn, have contributed the most extra points, 10 each, while Clark Hinkle, Green Bay, and Armand Niccolai, Pittsburgh, are tied with five field goals apiece.

Unbeaten Navy to Be at Peak Strength for Penn Battle

Busick Meets Reagan in Duel of Stars

Penn Has Weight Advantage in Line; Navy Backfield Will Bulk Large

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 30.—With one or two exceptions, Navy will be able to throw its full strength against University of Pennsylvania on Franklin Field Saturday, according to the probable lineup announced today by the gridiron board of strategy.

The probable lineup may show a shift or two before game time but as it now stands, the principal changes show that Joe Donahoe, 220-pound left tackle will start in place of Ksen. Steen, 25 pounds less in avoirdupois, but one of the best linesmen of the squad, who is reported suffering from a slight injury; Wanggaard at right end in place of Willis Maxson, and either Ralph Boyer or Bill Chip at quarter in place of Johnny Harrell or Phil Hurt. Maxson, Harrell and Hurt also are listed among the slightly injured.

Heavy Backfield

Otherwise the team will be the same as in recent games. The backs will be Bill Busik, ace left half; Cliff Lenz, hard-plunging right half, and Al Cameron, fullback. This is a formidable group. Busik and Cameron each weigh 185, while Lenz tips 198. It is one of the heaviest combinations that Navy has ever disported. Boyer and Chip, listed for the quarterback assignment, each weighs 180, compared to 200 pounds for either Harrell or Hurt.

The Quakers probably will have a weight advantage on the line as Captain Dick Foster and Wanggaard, Navy ends each scale only 165, compared to Penn's Kuszynski, 191, and Warner, 182. The rest of the Navy linemen are Vitucci, 200 and Sliwka, 190, guards; Sims, 195, center, and Chewning, 200, right tackle. Penn's other probable starters, not previously mentioned, are Englar, 225, left tackle; Menselzon, 172, left guard; Captain Frick, 210, center; Brechka, 175, right guard; Yard, 197, right tackle; Davis, 195, quarterback; Reagan, 185, left halfback; Dutcher, 175, right halfback, and Allen, 196, fullback.

Combat Penn Styles

The Middies again staged a stiff offensive and defensive drill against Penn formations, the main group working against junior varsity and plebe combinations. Tomorrow and Friday the squad will taper off, and will leave for the Quaker City early Saturday morning.

Three intercepted passes and a fumble wrecked Navy against Penn last season to a score of 13-6. The same Penn operatives who turned the tide against Navy are still available at Penn this season.

Statistically Penn stands second in the Nation in yards gained against opponents. By the same measuring stick, Navy is second in America defensively based on lowest average gain per opponent against the Midshipmen.

Observers anticipate that Francis X. Reagan, Penn versatile left half, will be the best back on the field Saturday. He is far more experienced than Navy's Bill Busik and probably holds an edge in putting. Last Saturday there was a great duel between Michigan's Tom Harmon and Penn's Reagan—the latter listed as experiencing an off-day. This Saturday Navy's ace, all-around back Bill Busik will try to rival Reagan's performances.

It is considered that Penn has an edge in power in ground attack but that Navy's air offensive is somewhat better. Penn holds a decided advantage in punting. Against similar type opponents Penn has been a much higher scoring team than Navy, but Navy has granted fewer touchdowns. Navy is still in the undefeated column—Penn dropped out Saturday at the hands of powerful Michigan.

in the dues or fees, nor any fundamental change in operating the club.

Among the improvements will be a much needed additional water supply that will benefit in the watering of the trees and greens. New course equipment is already on hand, while a turf garden will be constructed.

Dr. John Montieth, of the U. S. G. A. greens section, will assist in the building of the new tees and greens.

The members are already planning the Two-Man Team Championship Tournament for next year, that is expected to be one of the biggest events of its kind ever put on in this section. The first affair was held last year.

Western Maryland Drills on Offense

Westminster, Md., Oct. 30 (AP).—Western Maryland coaches drilled their football charges again today on offensive formations—determined to do something about the scoring drought that has plagued the Green Terrors in three games this fall.

Observing that the defense has been above average, Coach Charles Havens has stressed both the ground and aerial games in preparation for Saturday's clash with Dickinson College at Carlisle, Pa.

Bobby Bricker was tried in the wing back position today and might get the call over Bobo Knepp against Dickinson. Motion pictures of last week's Western Maryland-Dickinson game were shown the squad later.

The last Middle Atlantic P. G. A. Pro-Amateur of the season will be held Monday, November 4, at the Clifton Park Course in Baltimore.

Navy Soccer Team Beats Duke, 2 to 0

Game Is One of Best Of Season; No Scoring in First

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 30.—Showing greatly improved form, Navy's varsity soccer team turned back Duke University, of Durham, N. C., here today, 2 to 0, in what was perhaps the best game of the local season.

The Blue Devils showed speed and stanmin that held the Tars at bay. During the greater portion of the game, but the home team shared better in what might be termed the "breaks." There was no scoring in the first period. Six minutes after the second session got under way, however, Frank Andrews, Navy's right half, made a long boot from near midfield, and the ball bounded off the back of Fisher, Duke right forward, and rolled into the net before Drew was able to stop it. The battle was waged on even terms during the rest of this period.

About midway of the third stanza, Duke appeared to have made a successful shot when Tom Cowdrick, center half, booting from the sideline, sent the ball sailing toward the center of the net. It bounded off the hands of two Duke players and into the scoring zone, but the referee ruled that during the melee the Navy goalie was roughed and the score was disallowed. A minute before end end of this period, Frank Davis, Navy center, took a pass from Rieve and made a driving goal. The ball took a twisting course and just got past Morris, Duke goaltender, to roll into the corner of the net.

The Dukes were outplayed in the fourth quarter, Navy having the ball in the visitors' zone most of the time, but the Blue Devils put up a strong defense to prevent further scoring.

The Navy plebes also won today in comparatively easy fashion from Forest Park High School, of Baltimore, 6 to 0. The plebes led at halftime, 4 to 0.

Roxyette Sponsors C. H. M. A. Against Augusta M.A. Saturday

Suzanne Jordan, Of Earle, Selected By Charlotte Hall

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlotte Hall, Md., Oct. 30.—Spurred on by the inspiration of their newly-chosen sponsor and determined to "Stop Forkovitch," the Charlotte Hall Military Academy football squad went through its longest and hardest drill of the year here this afternoon in preparation for Saturday's battle with Augusta Military Academy in Fort Defiance, Va.

The squad will carry South with it the well-wishes and the inspiration of Miss Suzanne Jordan, member of Washington's Earle Roxyettes who was selected by squad members to sponsor the team on its Augusta trip.

Coach Ehringer impressed upon the boys, however, that they will need more than sponsorship of a beauteous dancer if they are to stop Augusta's great back, "Jolting Nick" Forkovitch, the one-man gang of the Virginians. Forkovitch has been the mainstay of the Augusta attack thus far this season, his best day coming in Augusta's 33-0 win over McGuire when he scored all of the 33 points himself.

In addition to Roxyette Jordon's sponsorship, Charlotte Hall will carry South with it a record of two wins, one tie and a loss. The Augusta tilt will mark the opening of gridiron relations with the Virginia school, and Ehringer and his squad want to start the series off on the right foot.

Cliff Lowe, of the first team, and Tom Keighliley, of the second contingent, led the tar scoring with two apiece, while Grosskopf and Suhre accounted for the remaining two.

This Handicap is staged each year for the benefit of the Cissel-Saxon Post of Silver Spring and was originated by Mr. Arbaugh who annually donates the use of the alleys for this popular event. The match is open to all bowlers, men and women, and the entry fee of $1.50 includes the cost of the five game block. Half of the entry fee goes into the prize fund with the remainder being donated to the American Legion.

A full handicap is allowed all bowlers with 125 as scratch. Men who have never bowled in a league are permitted to come in with a 110 average and women without league experience receive an average of 90. Handicaps will be based on this year's average if the entrant has bowled 1 games or more; otherwise, last year's average will be used. All league averages submitted must be verified by official scores of the various leagues. Prizes of 50%, 20%, 15%, 10%, and 5% will be awarded the winners.

One hundred and seventy-five bowlers entered last year's Handicap and it is expected the list will surpass the two hundred mark this year.

In addition to West, George M. Ferris, John W. Martin, W. A. Rogers 2d, and Curtis Walker were named to the board.

Another Green Planned

The report of Greens Committee Chairman Dana Beiser included plans for a new sixth green, to be used as a companion green to the present sixth and to be constructed to the right and short of the present one. The greens force has always had trouble keeping the old sixth in good shape.

Eventually, the club hopes to have 18 alternate greens to relieve the present carpets of steady play. Companion greens are already in play on the twelfth hole, while the new first green will be alternated with the present next spring, and may be used this year.

The most drastic change of last year met with the wholehearted approval of the membership, the alteration of the second hole.

Ray Swearingen Scores Ace at Columbia

Swearingen and Hatch were three down with as many to play in the four-ball match but the former's 1-4-3 finish squared things on the eighteenth.

Birch Rod Wins Feature as Laurel Racing Closes

H. Richards, Jockey, Still Being Booed

Widener's Charge Pays $3.70; Crowd Of 7,000 Witness Closing-Day Card

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Laurel, Md., Oct. 30.—The month-long meeting which came to an end today will go down in Jockey Harry Richards' memory as the "meeting of the big boo." Richards has heard the well-known raspberry on several occasions at the meeting but today's demonstration set a new high. He went to the post on George Widener's Birch Rod in the fifth race and was lustily booed in the parade. He won by six lengths with Birch Rod and then was loudly booed again as he brought the horse to the winner's circle.

Richards had earned the wrath of the Laurel fans when he "went to sleep" on Birch Rod in the stretch earlier in the meeting when the Pompey gelding went down to defeat. Th rider earned the frowns of the stewards on that occasion and was fined $100 for careless riding.

Birch Rod Pays $3.70

But despite the criticism of Richards today, Birch Rod paid only $3.70 while coupled with Rosetown as the George D. Widener entry. The race was the Fort McHenry Handicap, at 1 and 1-16 miles. Birch Rod's time was 1:48 4-5 over a muddy track. A crowd of 7,000 reported and saw the card begin under sagging skies and end in a bright sunshine.

Richards rode faultesaly today. He steadied Birch Rod in last position for a half, sent him out in the clear to make his move, took him to the front with a bold move entering the stretch and took up after opening a commanding lead in midstretch. Panoramscope was second with War Beauty third. War Beauty, Busy Morn and Rosetown raced one another into submission in a battle for the pace honors in the opening half-mile.

The final daily double of the meeting brought a return of $57.70 for the usual deuce. The Millsdale Stable cut loose with a "good thing" in the first race. Pirate, making second start of his career, galloped off with the decision and paid $7 in his own right. Merry Bid and Belle D'Armour were closest at the end.

Curious Coin Completes Double

The Brandon Stable's Curious Coin proved the best of the field in the third race, second half of the daily double set-up. This son of Brandon Mint came from off the pace of Light of Morn to win going away. Don Orlan was second, with the faltering Light of Morn in third position.

Two jockeys escaped injury in a spectacular spill that marked the day's steeplechase. Quakerstreet went down while leading and Danny Deever tripped over the fallen mare and lost his rider. The winner was Pine Tag, in the colors of W. G. Jones and capably ridden by Jockey Clements. Judge's Bid was second and Playdema was third. Pine Tag paid $11.30 and was clocked in 4:16 2-5 over the soggy course.

Mueller's Visigoth Wins Elizabethtown Purse at Downs

By the Associated Press

Churchill Downs, Louisville, Ky., Oct. 30.—The Shady Brook Stable of Theodore E. Mueller, long a favorite with Churchill Downs crowds, continued its winning ways today as isigoth won the Elizabethaown Purse, featured 7-furlong dash.

A confirmed slow beginner, but closer up than usual in the early running today, the 9-year-old son of Noel closed with a rush to catch the tiring leaders and beat R. C. Groff's Forever Prince by a half length. The latter caught A. C. Ernst's Alhalon, the favorite, in the run through the stretch and had enough left to outfinish him by two lengths.

Third choice in the wagering, Visigoth rewarded backers at $10.60 for $2. The official time for the seven-eighths was 1:26.

Hunter's Moon IV Bears Out English Adage, Pays 100-8

By the Associated Press

Newmarket, England, Oct. 30.—French-bred Hunter's Moon IV won the Cesarewitch in an exciting race today when Jockey Gordon Richards got him to the front in time to nose out Sir Pomm and King Legend.

The winner, owned by Edward Esmond, paid 100 to 8. He carried 122 pounds. Fourteen ran.

After his victory it was disclosed that Richards recently had a narrow escape from German bombers when the car in which he was riding with his wife and other companions was attacked. The occupants took refuge in a ditch.

There is an old English adage which speaks of someone being "so lucky that he fell into a ditch and came up with the Cesarewitch winner."

Capital Transit Net Doubles In September

Profit of $95,608 Is 114.4% Greater Than Last Year's

Despite a heavier tax load, net income of Capital Transit Co. soared 114.4 per cent in September, as compared with the same month last year.

In its report filed yesterday with the Public Utilities Commission, the transit firm reported net profit of $95,608, against $44,601 in the same 1939 month. Operating revenues in September totaled $1,074,602 as compared with $976,870 last year.

Operating expenses were $710,627 as compared with $661,221. Provision for depreciation was $113,514 as against $111,386 last year, the increase being attributed to the new street cars and buses put in service.

For the nine months ended September 30, Capital Transit reported net income of $564,909 as against $406,738 in the corresponding 1939 period, a gain of 39.1 per cent.

Coupons Are Called

The 1938 offer provides that these coupons would become purchasable only on and after November 1, 1940.

Pelley Lauds Forecasts

Importance of the regional shippers quarterly forecasts of freight car requirements as an aid to meeting future transportation demands was stressed yesterday by John J. Pelley, of Washington, president of the Association of American Railroads, in an address before the annual convention of the National Association of Shippers Advisory Boards at Chicago.

"In the present situation," he said, "it is of the utmost importance not only to the railroads, but also to commerce in general, that we shall have knowledge as far in advance as possible, and as accurate as possible, about the course of commerce."

To give you an idea of how seriously the British are taking America's elections of November 5, you should know that the British Broadcasting Corporation has contracted with Columbia's Washington correspondent, Albert Warner, for two transatlantic broadcasts in which he'll give them the results of the voting.

B. B. C.'s representative in America, in arranging for the broadcasts, said: "I sincerely believe that the people of England, despite their preoccupations, are as greatly interested in this American election as the citizens of the United States themselves—though, of course, the partisanship is absent. The reasons for such concern must be apparent to everyone. My country is at war. Its people are bearing up courageously under a terrific ordeal."

Al Warner will be making these broadcasts to England—and, incidentally, to all places in Europe where B. B. C. programs can be heard—in addition to his regular election night duties for C. B. S. He'll be heard frequently throughout election night with Elmer Davis and Bob Trout, giving an interpretation of the returns as they've been gathered by a vast C. B. S. election staff throughout the country.

Whether the results are conclusive at an early hour or not, though, it still will be an all-night job for Al. Because of the time difference, his last broadcast to England is scheduled for 4:40 a. m., November 6. That's 10:40 a. m. in England.

Smith Acquitted At Berryville

Dr. Guy Clinton Dies; Educator, Civic Leader

Taught Chemistry At Central High For 20 Years

Dr. Guy Clinton, 73, pioneer Takoma Park resident, civic leader and veteran educator, died yesterday at Walter Reed Hospital after an operation.

DR. CLINTON

Ill three weeks, Dr. Clinton was thought to be on the road to recovery, when a relapse occurred.

The jovial educator, who taught chemistry at Central High School for 20 years, was a former president of the Takoma Park (District-Maryland) Citizens Association, the Community League of Takoma Park and the Brotherhood Club of the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church, where he also served for some time as an elder.

The title by which he was known was given to him by students at Central High, and he treasured it more than any honorary doctorate a university could have conferred.

As a community leader and delegate to the District Federation of Citizens Associations and the Montgomery County Civic Federation he testified at scores of official hearings on Takoma Park problems. He was instrumental in obtaining the extension of Eastern Avenue and numerous other improvements.

A veteran of the Spanish-American War, he went to the Philippines at the turn of the century to help establish the educational system there. He remained for almost 20 years as a teacher. During the World War, he returned to Washington and served in the War Department.

He was born in Iowa and was graduated from the University of Iowa. Later he received a Master of Arts degree from the University of the Philippines.

He was a past master of the Manila lodge and a past officer of the Takoma Park lodge of the Masonic Order.

Surviving are his wife, two daughters, Mrs. Lahuna C. Hollowell and Miss Doris E. Clinton, of Takoma Park, and two sisters. Funeral services will be at 2 p. m. Saturday in the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church. Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

U. S. Navy Units Leave Key West On Secret Mission

Key West, Fla., Oct. 30 (AP).—Naval officials here remained silent today as to the whereabouts of five destroyers of the Key West neutrality patrol and a seaplane tender which sailed under sealed orders from this port at the southernmost tip of the Florida peninsula.

The craft, hurriedly provisioned and fueled for an extended voyage, left yesterday, and soon afterwards 11 naval bombing planes likewise took off for an undisclosed destination.

Commandant Walter F. Jacobs of the Key West station declined to comment. It was reported reliably that their mission was an important one.

It was reported reliably that other destroyers in the Key West neutrality patrol had been ordered into port to replenish their supplies, and would sail under the same orders.

In Washington, Secretary Knox declined to disclose information on the mission.

"It's not that I don't know, but I can't tell you," Knox told an inquirer.

Youth Congress Will Support No Candidate

The American Youth Congress announced yesterday that it would maintain its policy of "strict non-partisanship" and support no candidate in the Presidential election.

In a statement issued by its executive secretary, Joseph Cadden, at national headquarters here, the Youth Congress attacked a full-page advertisement in the New York Times inserted by the pro-Willkie First Voters League which stated that the Youth Congress is supporting President Roosevelt.

The advertisement, which appeared yesterday, denounced the Youth Congress as "Communist-controlled."

Pointing out that "even" the Dies Committee did not find the Youth Congress to be Communist-controlled, Cadden declared:

"We are amused that Mr. Willkie's supporters should think it good politics to announce that the five million in the American Youth Congress support the candidacy of President Roosevelt.

Even the Zoo Has Its Problem Children—Three Chimpanzees

1. EXOTIC FISHES from China arrived yesterday at the Commerce Building Aquarium. Miss Joan Krentzlin, secretary to Charles E. Jackson, assistant director of the Fish and Wildlife Service, admires two of the arrivals.

2. ... GEORGIA AND GEORGETTE, chimps at the Zoo, as they ate their lunch yesterday. A keeper restrained Mazie, a smaller but bellicose champanzee sharing their cage, who is making life so miserable for this pair that the trio probably will have to be split up.

As an antidote for the numbers jitters, consider the case of Georgia, Gerogette and Mazie. And, for good measure, a Royal Shubunkin or two.

Georgia, Georgette and Mazie are young chimpanzees. They also are the zoo's problem children. A Royal Shubunkin, as a fancier doesn't have to be told, is a fish. A very attractive fish, with multi-colored scales, pop eyes and flowing tail. Go see for yourself, at the Commerce building aquarium.

Anyway, Georgia and Georgette returned to the zoo yesterday from New York, after having spent the summer on exhibition at the fair. Keepers put the two chimp sisters, inseparable since babyhood, in the same cage with Mazie. The latter, much smaller and at least a year younger, came here last month from West Africa.

It looked yesterday as though the three chimps will have to be split up. The way Mazie bullies her two larger and older roommates is a terror to behold. She won't let them eat, she won't let them play together, she chases them from one end of the cage to the other.

Mazie has no more than to open her mouth than Georgia and Georgette scurry for shelter. Keepers don't know what to make of it. They're proud of having three chimps on exhibition in the same cage for the first time, but fear they'll have to break it up before Georgia and Georgette become nervous wrecks.

When feeding time came yesterday, Mazie had to be held by a keeper while the other two ate their lunch.

It's a different story at the aquarium, where Director Fred G. Orsinger was found proudly inspecting the dozen Royal Shubunkins, black moors and nymph fantails—exotic fishes all—which had just arrived from China.

"Oh, they get along fine together in the same tank," he said, fondly examining the long, flowing, train-like tail of a black moor.

"Don't get many Chinese fish any more, since the war," said Orsinger. "These are nice babies, huh?"

The newcomers, he explained, came from China, via Seattle and Chicago. One arrived rather pale in the gills, exhausted from the long trip, and was placed under a continuous cold shower to get oxygenated.

Redman, Draft Board Member, Dies

Suffered Stroke Friday While Posting Registrants' Numbers

Clarence Redman, 66, a member of the Sixth Area Selective Service Board, died yesterday at Emergency Hospital.

A native of Washington and retired businessman, Mr. Redman had been devoting full time to selective service work when he suffered a stroke Friday as he posted registrants' numbers on the bulletin board at Raymond School, area headquarters, and was taken to the hospital.

MR. REDMAN

He was a graduate of Business High School here and before his retirement several years ago served as president of the old Takoma Park Bank, director of the Lincoln National Bank, vice president of the Carry Ice Cream Company and secretary-treasurer of the Velvet-Kind Ice Cream Company.

He volunteered with a District regiment for the Spanish-American War, rose to the rank of captain and was with the American troops at the surrender of Santiago.

Mr. Redman was a thirty-second degree Mason and member of the Board of Trade, American Legion and Almas Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He made his home here at 4208 Arkansas avenue northwest.

Surviving are his wife; a son, Samuel Redman, of Washington; two daughters, Mrs. Lucy R. Matthews, of Clarendon, Va., and Miss Nancy Lee Redman of Washington, and two sisters, Mrs. Edith Fogg, of Youngstown, Ohio, and Mrs. Henry Setz, of Syracuse, N. Y.

Board members assigned to service departments included:

Manufacturing—Dr. L. W. Strickler, of Norfolk, Va.; Robert Raeder, of Kingston, Pa., and Clarence Dittmer, of New York.

Real estate—Judge Hirman Keller, of Doylestown, Pa.; William Cappelman, of Columbia, S. C.; Russell Alden, of Washington, D. C., and J. L. Fisher, of Salisbury, N. C.

The board reported more than 20,000,000 pieces of literature from its presses last year. It plans soon to make available the entire Lutheran Church service on phonograph records.

Ship Off for Britain To Remove French

By the Associated Press

The French Embassy disclosed that the French freighter San Francisco sailed from New York yesterday for England to remove French citizens from the British Isles to France.

A spokesman said the sailing was arranged in agreement with the British and United States Governments.

It was estimated that there are about 6,000 French citizens in the British Isles. Both the French and British governments, the French spokesman said, desire that these people be removed because some of them virtually have the status of prisoners.

Russell Kent, Correspondent 18 Years, Dies

Russell Kent, 55, veteran Washington newspaperman and former president of the National Press Club, died of a heart attack last night as a taxicab was taking him to Emergency Hospital.

MR. KENT

Mr. Kent, correspondent for the Birmingham News and Age-Herald, had left his National Press Building office and became ill in the taxi. He ordered the driver to take him to Emergency Hospital, and died en route.

A native of Chattanooga, son of the late Weston W. Kent, general manager of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad, Mr. Kent began his career as an $8 a week reporter for the Chattanooga Times shortly after getting out of high school.

For the next 17 years he worked on numerous papers in every capacity, including three times as managing editor. Among the papers with which he was associated were Memphis (Tenn.) News-Scimitar, Times-Democrat and Times-Picayune of New Orleans, New York Sun, Knoxville Journal and Tribune, Montgomery Advertisers and United States Daily News, of Washington.

Mr. Kent also published a paper for a short period at Marshall, Tex., and started a reform crusade with his partner. The partner was beaten up in reprisal, and Mr. Kent took to horseback riding to and from the office so that he could defend himself from sudden attack.

With his wife, the former Oneata White, Mr. Kent came to Washington in 1922 to represent the Birmingham News and Age-Herald. They made their home at 1901 Wyoming Avenue Northwest. In 1929 he served as president of the Press Club.

He leaves, besides his wife, his mother, Mrs. Edith Pierce Kent, and a sister, Miss Hazel Kent, of Los Angeles. Funeral arrangements are to be completed today.

500 From D.C. Hear Baltimore Speech

A caravan of 10 buses and approximately 50 autos carried 500 Washington boosters to Baltimore last night for Wendell Willkie's address there.

The motorcade left from the headquarters of the Associated Willkie Clubs, 727 Fifteenth Street Northwest. A large crowd later gathered in the headquarters to hear the speech broadcast.

HAY FEVER and ASTHMA
Science has not yet found a preparation which will give relief to all hay fever and asthma sufferers. This is understandable when one realizes that both of these conditions can be caused by many things, such as various pollens from flowers and weeds, perfumes, animal hairs, improper diet, etc. However, science has discovered that many cases of hay fever and asthma get amazing relief from the administration of a certain vital food element. Allergen, a rich source of this important element, gives relief to thousands of sufferers year in and year out. In fact, if Allergen is taken early enough, hay fever and asthma can often be prevented. Allergen is put up in inexpensive, easy-to-take tablets. Trial size, 30c; regular size, $1.00; economy, $2.00.
